

an attack on the enemy entrenches on the top in face of very heavy fire. When it was decided to retire and take up a position further down the hill he collected all the men he could gather, and, before descending, assisted in getting all the wounded away.

Capt. Wrack Hatton, 2nd Bn., N. Staff. R.

(INDIA)

He commanded the leading company of the N. Staffs. Regt. in their attack on 11th May 1919, at Khargali. His coolness and courage throughout the advance went far in enabling his company to arrive within a few yards of the enemy's trenches before our artillery lifted. His example of courage and devotion to duty at the most critical period of the day was undoubtedly of the very greatest value.

T./Lt. Edward Victor Horseman, Worc. R.,
attd. 2nd Bn., N. Staff. R.

(INDIA)

For marked gallantry and able leadership on 11th May 1919, at Khargali. He commanded the first platoon of the leading company in its attack on the first objective. He led the way into the enemy's trenches, shooting down three of the enemy personally. Though wounded, he continued to command his platoon. He was also in command of the platoons which were attacked near Jamrud on the 9th May 1919, when they beat off the enemy.

Capt. John Sydney Lethbridge, R.E., attd.
57th Coy., Sappers and Miners, I.A.

(INDIA)

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty at Thal, 27th May to 2nd June 1919. During the siege he was untiring in helping all units to improve their defences. He improvised a fresh hospital, and showed great energy throughout, working for the most part under shell and sniping fire.

Lt. Thomas Ivor Stevenson, K.R.R.C., Spec.
Res., attd. 2/8th Gurkha Rif., I.A.

(INDIA)

For good leadership and conspicuous gallantry during the withdrawal to camp from Orange Patch Ridge on 15th May 1919. The enemy pressed the retirement heavily, and, being without signallers, he went from one position to another under continual fire and personally arranged the retirement of each party of his force. The retirement was carried out most successfully.

Lt. Wilfred Charles Tungate, I.A.R.O., attd.
1/9th Gurkha Rif., I.A.

(INDIA)

On the 17th May 1919, on the attack on the Ridge he led a party with the greatest gallantry to within twenty yards of the summit, and maintained himself there unsupported in the face of greatly superior forces for many hours. When eventually reinforced, he and his party were the first on the summit.

Lt. John Leslie Waggett, 1st D. Gds.

(INDIA)

For conspicuous gallantry on 16th May 1919, at Dakka. He was in command of two troops which were sent to guard the left flank. The enemy made determined efforts to work round this flank, and was only prevented by the skill with which he handled his command. The successful withdrawal of the centre and right were in a large measure due to his courage and initiative. He subsequently played a prominent part in the charge.

SOUTH AFRICAN FORCE.

T./2nd Lt. Ernest Carter, M.M., 1st Bn.,
S. Afr. Infy. (France).

His behaviour was most outstanding during the action west of Bouchavasnes on 24th March 1918, and inspired his men. His courage and leadership contributed materially to the stubbornness of the defence, and the defeat of numerous hostile attacks. He was eventually wounded while taking men across the open under close range machine-gun fire, to put out a defensive flank.

T./2nd Lt. Gordon Cuthbert Curtis, 1st
Bn., S. Afr. Infy. (France).

During the fighting east of Hendicourt on 22nd March 1918, he displayed great courage and resource. He was in command of a very extended length of trench, and by his able and determined leadership beat back numerous enemy attacks. By altering his dispositions as occasion demanded he stopped several attempts of the enemy to envelop his right flank.

Temp. Lt. William Frederick Faulds, V.C.,
1st Bn., S. Afr. Infy. (France).

In the retirement from the line east of Hendicourt, 22nd March 1918, he was commanding one of the platoons which formed the rear guard. He handled his men most ably, and exposed himself freely. Though the enemy pressed hard, he, by his fearless and able leadership, checked them, and enabled the remainder of the battalion to withdraw with slight losses. He was wounded on the 24th.

T./2nd Lt. Thomas Garstang, 2nd Bn., S.
Afr. Infy. (France).

During the operations 21-24th March 1918, he set a splendid example to his men, exposing himself continually to the hottest fire. Numerous encircling movements by the enemy were frustrated by his alertness and good leadership. His behaviour throughout was of a very high order.
