The Secretary of State for Scotland, in exercise of his powers under the Seeds Act, 1920, has made the Seeds (Scotland) Amendment Regulations, 1951, with effect as from 1st August 1951.

Under the Seeds Act, 1920, a seller of seeds must declare certain prescribed particulars, which include particulars with respect to the percentage of purity (i.e., the percentage of seeds which are of the kind of which the parcel purports to consist), ascertained on a test made in accordance with the provisions of the Act. These Regulations amend the Seeds (Scotland) Regulations, 1922, so that the method prescribed for determining in Scotland the percentage of purity may conform with the present practice of international trade in seeds.
