PUBLISHED BY AUTHORITY.

FROM FRIDAY, JUNE 17, TO TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1814.

THE following Addresses have been presented to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent; which Addresses his Royal Highness was pleased to receive very graciously :

To his Royal Highness George Prince of Wales, REGENT of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

May it please your Royal Highness,

WE, his Majesty's most faithful subjects, the Magistrates and Town-Council of the Burgh of Dumfries, embrace this opportunity of approaching the throne, with sentiments of loyal and dutiful subjects.

The late wonderful change, by which legitimate sovereigns have recovered their thrones, renowned states and kingdoms their independence, and all Europe repose, from the calamities of a war, unprecedented in point of bloodshed and devastation, has filled us with inexpressible joy and gladness. The goodness of God in casting the shield of his Providence over all our invaluable rights and privileges, and in stretching out his arm so visibly to check the late usurper of France in his might, and conduct him to his downfall, has awakened within us every due feeling of devout gratitude. We reflect with national pride how, under the Almighty, the first check was given to his career by the skill and intrepidity of the fleets and armies of the British empire: and we congratulate your Royal Highness, that by the magnanimity and wisdom of your councils, and the firm and seasonable application of the resources and energies of the United Kingdom, you enjoy the glory of having roused and conducted surrounding nations to the recovery of their independence, and made your native country the saviour of Europe.

That Almighty God may ever have your Royal Highness under his sacred keeping; that he may continue to direct his Majesty's government, which has prospered so signally under your auspices; and that he may bless you with a long reign, over a free, a virtuous, and a loyal people, are the prayers of, may it please your Royal Highness, his Majesty's most faithful and most obedient subjects, the Magistrates and Town-Council of Dumfries.

Signed, in our name, in our presence, and at our appointment, by

JOSEPH GASS, Provost.

[Transmitted by the Marquess of Queensberry, and presented by Viscount Sidmouth.]

To his Royal Highness the PRINCE REGENT.

May it please your Royal Highness,

IN the midst of the acclamations of an exulting and grateful people, we, the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Council of the City of Edinburgh, participating in every event which can affect the glory of your Royal Highness's government, the prosperity of this land, and the general freedom and happiness of the world, approach the throne, to add our congratulating voice to the united voices of our fellow-subjects in every part of the empire:

The feelings we have now to express are not of that ordinary triumph, with which, during a period that is to be ever memorable in the naval and military history of our country, we have so often exulted over the achievements of British valour. It was then, indeed, our pride to think of the skill and the courage and the glory of the warriors, who, in every conflict of our armies or our fleets, had shewn how powerful are the defenders of a free people. But our joy for the past was mixed with other feelings; and even victory itself, as often as we thought of the future, had a sort of gloom and sadness to our hearts, because it seemed still to speak of other blood that was to be shed for the purchase of other victories. Nothing seemed truly won; because there still remained unsubdued, and unsoftened by all the miseries which it had produced, that dreadful power, which, in its insatiable thirst of war, found, alike in defeat and in conquest, only new motives to gather from the very lands which it had desolated, still wider means of future desolation. By the blessing of Divine Providence on the councils and arms of your Royal Highness, and the sovereigns allied in the same generous cause, that power no longer exists. The great combat of Europe, which has been fought on so many fields, is now over: a victory has been gained, not over a few fierce bands, whose place might soon be filled by bands as ferocious, but over the principle of hostility itself: and he, whose single will had opposed itself to the peace and happiness of the world, as if the misery of mankind was to be lasting as his own miserable existence, now lives, only to be a more striking example of the insecurity of a tyrant's sway, and to have the additional wretchedness of knowing, in his state of exile from the human race, that the nations, from which he has been driven, are enjoying a prosperity, which it is no longer in his power to prevent or to destroy.

If the spectacle of one happy people be delightful, how much more delightful is that wide aspect of happiness, which Europe now presents. In the great family of the civilized world, nation is rejoicing with nation, in one general deliverance; plenty is returning to the field, and commerce to the shore, and purer influences of virtue to the heart. There is no longer a voice of terror, that commands man, wherever man is subject to it, to be ignorant and guilty: and we yield, therefore, to the delightful hope of a lasting amity of nations, because it is not peace only which we see, but, with the diffusion of peace, the increasing diffusion also of knowledge, and virtue, and religion, which are the only securities of future tranquillity, as they alone are capable of comprehending the awful lesson of the past.

Such blessed effects it would indeed be gratifying to us to contemplate, though Britain had been only a spectator of the happiness produced. But when we think of the distinguished part which this country has sustained in the long warfare for the independence of Europe—of the zeal with which, when nation after nation had retired from the combat, she still looked fearlessly to the goodness of her cause, and the protecting justice of Heaven; and, under the pressure of difficulties, from which feebler spirits would have shrunk, still held herself magnanimously forth, as the succourer of those who had lifted the standard of their ancient rights against the tyranny of the usurper; when we look to the deliverer of Spain, who, by connecting it for ever with the glory of his name, has ennobled to every age the land which he has delivered, and when we trace to the successes of an army worthy of their illustrious leader that spirit of resistance, which spread swiftly to the farthest kingdom of the North, and gathering in its return, from every people that had been oppressed, new hosts of avengers, crushed at length, beneath the weight of his own accumulated wrongs, the foe of the world, it is impossible for us not to feel, in our admiration of our country's efforts, a still livelier sympathy in all the happiness that is flowing from them. We are proud of being Britons; and with the pride of this distinction, we are impressed with still deeper gratitude to your Royal Highness's government, and to the generous statesmen, whose liberal and heroic counsels, seconded by the skill and gallantry of armies of heroes, have raised to so much glory the British name.

While we offer this humble commemoration of British wisdom and British heroism, your Royal Highness will permit us at the same time to express our admiration of the splendid military achievements of the confederate powers, and still more of the noble spirit of moderation that has attended all the successes of their arms. It is truly a spirit as glorious as it is unprecedented. In the ordinary vicissitudes of war, what is gained by one state is lost by another; but it is the peculiar character of these recent successes, to have had in view no selfish acquisition, and only that general happiness of the social community of mankind, in the establishment of which the vanquished have gained still more than the victors. The liberators of every nation through which they have passed have marched calmly forward in their great career, as if they had previously conquered all the bad passions of the human breast. There is no presumptuous vanity of having overthrown a power which was before regarded as almost irresistible—no insolence of triumph—no remembrances of revenge. The Sovereign of Moscow, the leader of troops that had seen, with indignation and hopes of speedy vengeance, the ashes of their holy city, is, at Paris, as considerate of the preservation of the capital of his recent invader, as if it were the metropolis of his own land. When we have looked back on the misery, and on the savage excesses, of which, in the fury of revolutionary frenzy, the capital of France was the scene, we have often felt, as if some action of more than ordinary moral sublimity would be necessary to cover the remembrance of so much horror:—and it almost seems to us, as if the memorable virtue, which has now been displayed on the same scene, was truly a sublime influence of this sort, purifying by new delightful remembrances what had been so long profaned, and consecrating it once more as a dwelling-place for the virtuous and the happy.

To that ancient capital of a powerful kingdom, the sovereign, whom we have so long seen with respectful commiseration an exile in our land, is at length restored. Our wishes accompany him to the throne of his ancestors; and we trust that, under his tranquil reign, a new era of peace and prosperity and freedom is rising on the land which he is called to rule. The years which he has spent in this happy country will not be profitless to France; since, in witnessing the blessings of a government like that which your Royal Highness has the high destiny of exercising, he cannot fail to have observed how closely the happiness of the ruler is connected with the temperate freedom of those who obey. It is indeed a splendid homage to the excellence of that system of polity, which he has thus had an opportunity of appreciating, that it is in as near an approach to its forms and its spirit, as the different circumstances of the two countries allow, that the amenders of the ancient royal constitution of France have now sought all those privileges which it seemed to them important for the citizens of a state to claim; as if, after every variety of innovation, from the wildest democracy to the most gloomy despotism, they had at length discovered, that freedom is to be found only in the calm possession of the rights which it has so long been the blessing of your Royal Highness's subjects to enjoy. It is this political dignity of Britain, which, after all her triumphs on the field and on the ocean, in science and in arts, still remains her chief glory. She stands on her proud eminence, the enlightener of the world; as much as its protector; her arms the strength of the feeble, and her laws the example of all who aspire to legislate for the free.

That the friendship which now binds together all the nations of Europe may be as lasting as the remembrance of the great events which have led to it, and that Heaven may long continue to bless your Royal Highness's government, for the prosperity of this land, and for the example of other nations, is the sincere prayer of your Royal Highness's most dutiful and grateful subjects, the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Council of the City of Edinburgh, in Council assembled.

Signed in our name, by our appointment, and in our presence, and the seal of the said city is hereto affixed, at Edinburgh, the second day of May one thousand eight hundred and fourteen years.

W. TROTTER, Acting Chief Magistrate.

[Transmitted by W. Trotter, Esq. and presented by Viscount Sidmouth.]

To his Royal Highness George Prince of Wales, REGENT of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

The humble and dutiful Address of the Freeholders, Justices of the Peace, Commissioners of Supply, and Heritors of the County of Stirling.

May it please your Royal Highness,

WE, his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Freeholders, Justices of the Peace, Commissioners of Supply, and Heritors of the county of Stirling, with sentiments of the warmest attachment to your Royal Highness and your illustrious house, beg leave to lay at the foot of the throne, our heartfelt congratulations on the great events which have been passing around us, on the downfall of usurpation and tyranny, and the cheering prospect of a safe, an honourable, and a lasting peace.

Although friends of peace, we always advocated the war which is just terminated, conscious from experience, that any treaty with the late ruler of France could only have been an insecure and armed truce.

Upon contemplating these grand results, we are led to attribute them chiefly, under the blessing of Divine Providence, to the wise councils, and vigorous measures adopted by your revered father, our beloved Sovereign, and so happily and steadily persevered in by your Royal Highness, aided by the courage and discipline of his Majesty's fleets and armies, and the consummate skill of their great commanders.

Proud of the name of Britons, we exult in the reflection that while many of the states of the continent of Europe were added to the usurper's dominions, Great Britain stood forward the champion of public liberty, and the great bulwark of the nations.

The restless ambition of the tyrant at length led him to attack Russia; but her warlike people, animated by the bright example of British valour, and assured of her powerful aid, with their magnanimous monarch at their head, rushed to the conflict, and rolled back the storm upon the destroyer. In succession, Prussia, Austria, and other nations, caught the glorious flame, and bursting their fetters, poured forth bands of heroes, who by their devotedness and courage in the good cause, have rendered their names immortal.

We participate in the high gratification which your Royal Highness must have received, in restoring to the wishes of France, with the honours due to his exalted rank, her virtuous and rightful Sovereign from his asylum in this island.

We regret that the unjust and ungenerous conduct of the American government should have in-olved the British empire in a war with that country; but we trust in the firmness of your Royal Highness's councils for the maintenance of our maritime rights, and for bringing this contest also to an honourable conclusion.

It is our most fervent prayer, that your Royal Highness may long live in the hearts of a free, united, happy, and loyal people.

Subscribed in name, and by appointment of the meeting, by Thomas Graham Stirling of Airth, Esquire, Convener of the county, the Chairman, at Stirling, the 12th day of May 1814.

THOMAS GRAHAM STIRLING, Chairman.
