BALMORAL CASTLE,
6th September 1853.

THIS Evening, at Half-past Six o'Clock, Her Most Gracious Majesty THE QUEEN, accompanied by His Royal Highness The PRINCE ALBERT, and Their Royal Highnesses The PRINCE OF WALES and PRINCE ALFRED, and Suite, arrived at Her Majesty's Castle of Balmoral.

The following ADDRESSES have been presented to The QUEEN, through Earl Granville, which Addresses Her Majesty was pleased to receive in the most gracious manner :—

To The QUEEN's Most Excellent Majesty.

May it please your Majesty,

WE, the Vice-Presidents and Members of the Royal Dublin Society, incorporated for the promotion of Husbandry and other useful Arts in Ireland, request permission to offer the homage of our loyal congratulations on this your Majesty's second visit to the metropolis of this part of your dominions.

Bearing in grateful remembrance the exhilarating influence of your royal presence amongst us at a period when a large portion of our population were suffering under a mysterious dispensation of Providence, we anticipate the gratification your Majesty will now experience in contemplating the improved condition of your Irish Subjects, and in witnessing exertions being made, individual and general, by means of which industry is stimulated, self-reliance is encouraged, and art and science are applied to the improvement of the soil and to the development of native resources.

Directed as our labours are to the attainments of such ends, we possess an assurance of your Majesty's sympathy and interest in those objects, by your having been graciously pleased to become the Patron of our Society; but we also acknowledge with gratitude a still more valuable mark of your Majesty's solicitude for the welfare of this Country by your gracious presence, and that of your Royal Consort, at the Exhibition of Arts, Manufactures, and Industry, now inaugurated on our premises, and in connexion with our Society.

We deeply appreciate a condescension so expressive of your Majesty's earnest desire to promote the industrial prosperity of Ireland.

We hail your royal visit as the highest reward our patriotic countryman and fellow-member can receive for the unparalleled private munificence which has originated and matured the present extended Exhibition, in substitution of those efforts in the same direction, which we have so long considered essential to our public trust.

Unequaled as has been hitherto in this Country such a magnificent display of industrial products as are now spread out for the instruction of our population, we but echo the general sentiment when we refer this acknowledged boon to Ireland, and the increasing importance of such displays in public estimation, in a great measure to the successful example so nobly set by His Royal Highness Prince Albert in the year 1851, under the patronage and cordial support of your Majesty.

To witness the triumph of such peaceful objects, so contributory to the welfare and happiness of your Majesty's subjects and mankind in general, cannot but prove gratifying to your Majesty's parental heart; and while it is our duty to acknowledge the generous sympathy that has prompted your Majesty to quit your capital, in order to gladden and encourage our people in their pursuit of productive industry on this auspicious occasion, we confidently predict that from such marks of confidence and favour will arise fresh bonds of attachment to your Majesty's person and family.

To The QUEEN's Most Excellent Majesty.

May it please your Majesty,

WE, your Majesty's most devoted subjects, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Ancient City of Limerick, most humbly approach your Majesty upon the occasion of your gracious visit to Ireland, to tender the assurance of our undeviating loyalty and sincere attachment to your illustrious Crown and Person.

We claim with pleasure the happy privilege of again greeting our beloved Sovereign, and expressing our heartfelt aspirations that this Kingdom may long enjoy the happiness of being ruled by her virtuous and enlightened sway.
