AMBERG—Nov. 30.—Five o'clock P. M.

IN advancing towards Portaál, a few small detachments only of the enemy, of the division of Collaud, were met with between Ratibon and Kelhaim, who were probably already on their march to Landshut. Colonel Walmoden surrounded the village of Lengenfeld, near Portaál, and carried off the garrison which was left there, consisting of seven officers, 200 cavalry and infantry, and 60 horses; Colonel Walmoden found the garrison of Kelhaim, which consisted of a few hundred men, retiring. The loss of the Austrians in this march has been very considerable. Captain Scheibler, of the Houlans de Meerveldt, posted with a detachment of 60 horse near Freystadt, attacked, in the morning of the 29th, at Pleinfeldt, the 7th regiment of French cuirassiers of 300 men during its march, put it into disorder, and made two officers and seven men prisoners; the Colonel of the regiment was wounded, and two officers were killed. The loss of the enemy has been 20 killed, and wounded. Captain Scheibler, who was slightly wounded in the arm, had two men killed, and two made prisoners. Pleinfeld is evacuated by the enemy, and none have passed through it since the last column, which passed through on the 29th.

Extract of a Letter from his Royal Highness the
A CHUCKE JOHN, to the Council of War at Vienna, dated Haun, December 1, 1800.

According to the intention which I yesterday communicated to the Council of War, I advanced this morning, before day-break, with three columns, in order to attack the enemy. We found them advantageously posted on a rising ground; and they defended themselves with the greatest obstinacy. Our attacks were repeatedly repulsed; at length, however, our brave troops remained victorious, after ten hours resistance on the part of the enemy, who disputed the ground inch by inch, but who were compelled to abandon us (in as far as I am at present informed), six pieces of cannon, and 800 prisoners.

Our out-posts are near Haag. From what I have been able to collect from the prisoners, the number of troops that opposed us amounted to three divisions.

Those who have particularly distinguished themselves on this occasion are the regiment of Lacy, which had three Staff Officers wounded. Those of Wezey and Benioffsky hussars, the 60th regiment of infantry, the 3d battalion of Peterwardener and the Gradiskaner, the frontier hussars, and the artillery.

Major-General Loppert, who commanded the van guard, and Captain Junger of Weizy hussars, at the head of his Squadron, attacked and carried one of the enemy's batteries. Field-Marshal-Lieutenant Klenau mentions his having passed the Danube, pushed on as far as Arbach, made several prisoners, and invested Straubing and Ratibon. Major-General Mufery took at Landshut a company of French grenadiers and three officers. Our loss in wounded is not inconsiderable. I shall send a detailed account of it, as well as of the whole affair, as soon as circumstances enable me to do so.
