

the creditors of his firm belief and conviction that the proposal to remove him originates with some creditors in this country, who had obtained fraudulent preferences, which the duty of the trustee compelled him to object to, and with some of the English creditors, who seem to have it in view to prevent a fair communication of the English funds.

The trustee conceives himself further called upon to state that he having received a letter from the attorney of the assignees of James Sommervail's estate in England, dated upon the 16th February 1802, in which he requested that the trustee would transmit to him an account of the monies received by the trustee from the bankrupt estate in Scotland, upon receipt of which the attorney for the assignees pledged himself to make a similar communication to the trustee in regard to the bankrupt estate in England, the trustee did, in the course of a few posts, transmit his accounts to the said attorney, and did, at an after period, furnish to Mr William Inglis, a continuation of his accounts; from which it appeared, that all the funds recovered by the trustee were deposited in one of the public banks in terms of the statute, as soon as they came to his hands; and the trustee must further beg leave to state, that although he has written many letters to the attorney for the assignees, claiming performance of his promise, and requiring him, in terms thereof, to transmit to the trustee the accounts of the English assignees, yet all his applications have hitherto been fruitless. The creditors will therefore come prepared to say, whether or not any, and what steps should be taken to compel the assignees to render an account of the sums intrusted with by them.
