

your Majesty's Feet, in the present Hour of general Festivity and Joy, this our humble and dutiful Address, the Dictate of the most true and heartfelt Congratulations on the happy Re-establishment of His Majesty's Health, no less a Source of Comfort to you His Royal Consort, than a Blessing to His People, and this under our anxious Hope and Wish of its long, very long, Continuance for the mutual Happiness of each, and the Prosperity of all.

Nor can we be silent in our Admiration of the Conduct that was manifested by your Majesty on the trying Occasion of our Sovereign's Indisposition. It was, in a Word, worthy of yourself, and having said this, to say more would be not to add but to take from Merit of so transcendent a Nature, and at the same Time so much your Majesty's own.

[Transmitted by the Earl of Abingdon.]
