Copy of a Letter from Rear-Admiral Foley, Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Ships and Vessels in the Downes, to John Wilson Croker Esq; dated on board the Monmouth, in the Downes, the 22d Instant.

SIR,

I HEREWITH transmit a Letter just received from Captain Carteret of the Naiad, detailing the Account of an Attack made on that Frigate off Boulogne on the 20th Instant, by Seven Praams of Twelve Twenty-four Pounders each, and Ten Brigs said to have Four long Twenty-four Pounders each, with One Sloop said to have Two such Guns.

Captain Carteret applauds the Steadiness and Zeal of the Officers and Crew on this Occasion, and from what I know of their high State of Discipline I am convinced their Conduct will ever merit the Approbation of their commanding Officer.

I have the Honour to be, &c.

THOMAS FOLEY, Rear-Admiral.

SIR,

YESTERDAY Morning, while this Ship was lying at an Anchor off this Place, much Bustle was observed among the Enemy's Flotilla, moored along shore close under the Batteries of their Bay, which appeared to indicate that some Affair of unusual Moment was in Agitation. At about Noon, Buonaparte, in a Barge, accompanied by several other Officers, was distinctly seen to proceed along their Line to the Centre Ship, which immediately hoisted the Imperial Standard at the Main, and lowered it at his Departure, substituting for it a Rear-Admiral's Flag; he afterwards visited others, and then continued in his Boat for the rest of the Evening.

Since it is so much within the well known Custom of that Personage to adopt Measures that confer supposed Eclat on his Presence, I concluded that something of that Kind was about to take place. Accordingly, Seven Praams, each having Twelve Twenty-four Pounders long Guns, with One Hundred and Twenty Men, and commanded by Rear-Admiral Baste, weighed and stood towards this Ship, being expressly ordered by the French Ruler, as I have since learned, to attack us. As the Wind was S. W., with a very strong Flood-Tide setting to the N. E., while the Enemy bore nearly South from us, it was clear that by weighing we could only increase our Distance from him; so that our only Chance of closing with him at all was by remaining at an Anchor.

The Naiad, therefore, quietly awaited his Attack in that Position, with Springs on her Cable.

It was exclusively in the Enemy's own Power to choose the Distance: each Ship of his Squadron stood within Gun-Shot, gave us successively her Broadside, tacked from us, and in that Mode continuously repeated the Attack. After this had so continued for Three Quarters of an Hour, Ten Brigs (said to have Four long Twenty-four Pounders) and One Sloop (said to have Two such Guns) also weighed and joined the Ships in occasionally cannonading us, which was thus kept up for upwards of Two Hours without Intermission, and returned, I humbly hope, with sufficient Effect by this Ship.

At slack Water the Naiad weighed her Anchor and stood off, partly to repair some trivial Damages, but chiefly by getting to Windward, to be better enabled to close with the Enemy, and get within Shore of some, at least, of his Flotilla. After standing off a short Time, the Naiad tacked and made all Sail towards them; but at about Sunset it became calm, when the Enemy took up his Anchorage under the Batteries Eastward of Boulogne, while the Naiad resumed her's in her former Position.

In this Affair not a British Subject was hurt, and the Damages sustained by this Ship are too trifling for me to mention or report. I have indeed to apologize for dwelling so long on this Affair, but my Motive is the Manner in which I understand it has been magnified by the Enemy, and the extraordinary Commendations which have been lavished on the Frenchmen engaged in it by their Ruler. It is fitting, therefore, that His Majesty's Government should know the real State of the Case, and aid the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty may rest assured, that every Officer and Man on board the Naiad did zealously and steadily fulfil his Duty.

I have the Honour to be, &c.

PHILIP CARTERET, Captain.

Copy of another Letter from Rear-Admiral Foley to John Wilson Croker Esq; dated on board the Monmouth, in the Downes, the 23d Instant.

SIR,

I HAVE much Pleasure in transmitting a Letter from Captain Carteret, of His Majesty's Ship Naiad, relating the Capture of La Ville de Lyons, a French Praam Ship of the Boulogne Flotilla, mounting Twelve long Twenty-four Pounders, commanded by Commodore Jean Baptiste Coupé, and Captain Jean Barbaud, with One Hundred and Twelve Men, Sixty of them Soldiers of the 72d Regiment.

On this Occasion, as well as on the Attack made on the Naiad the preceding Day, Captain Carteret has shewn a Skill and Judgment which does him infinite Honour. He applauds the Conduct of the respective Captains under his Command, who have always, with commendable Zeal, availed themselves of every Opportunity of distinguishing themselves in Attacks on the Enemy.

The Lists of killed and wounded are herewith sent.

I have the Honour to be, &c.

(Signed) THOMAS FOLEY,
Rear-Admiral.

*His Majesty's Ship Naiad, off Boulogne,
September 21, 1811.*

SIR,

THIS Morning, at Seven o'Clock, that Part of the Enemy's Flotilla which was anchored to the Eastward of Boulogne, consisting of Seven Praams and Fifteen smaller Vessels, chiefly Brigs, weighed and stood out on the Larboard Tack, the Wind being S.W., apparently to renew the same Kind of distant Cannonade which took place Yesterday. Different, however, from Yesterday, there was now a Weather Tide. The Naiad, therefore, weighed, and getting well to Windward, joined His Majesty's Brigs Rinaldo, Redpole, and Castilian, with the Viper Cutter, who had all zealously turned to Windward in the Course of the Night, to support the Naiad in the expected Conflict. We all lay to on the Larboard Tack, gradually drawing off Shore, in the Hope of imperceptibly inducing the Enemy also to withdraw farther from the Protection of his formidable Batteries.

To make known the Senior Officer's Intentions, no other Signals were deemed necessary, but "to prepare to attack the Enemy's Van," then standing out, led by Rear-Admiral Baste, and "not to fire until quite close to the Enemy."

Accordingly the Moment the French Admiral tacked in Shore, having reached his utmost Distance, and was giving us his Broadfides, the King's small Squadron bore up together with the utmost Rapidity, and stood towards the Enemy under all the Sail each could conveniently carry, receiving a Shower of Shot and Shells from the Flotilla and Batteries, without returning any, until within Pistol-Shot, when the Firing on both Sides His Majesty's Cruisers threw the Enemy into inextricable Confusion. The French Admiral's Praam was the principal Object of Attack by this Ship: But as that Officer in leading had of course tacked first, and thereby acquired fresh Way, and was now under much Sail, pushing with great Celerity for the Batteries, it became impossible to reach him without too greatly hazarding His Majesty's Ship. Having however succeeded in separating a Praam from him, which had handsomely attempted to succour his Chief, and which I had intended to consign to the particular Care of Captains Anderson and M'Donald, of the Rinaldo and Redpole, while the Castilian attacked others, it now appeared best preferably to employ this Ship in effectually securing her.

The Naiad accordingly ran her on board; Mr. Grant, the Master, lashed her alongside; the small Arms Men soon cleared her Decks, and the Boarders, Sword in Hand, completed her Subjugation. Nevertheless, in justice to our brave Enemy, it must be observed, that his Resistance was most obstinate and gallant, nor did it cease until fairly overpowered by the overwhelming Force we so promptly applied. She is named La Ville de Lyons, was commanded by a Monf. Barbaud, who was severely wounded, and has on board a Monf. La Coupé, who as Commodore of a Division was entitled to a Broad Pendant. Like the other Praams she has Twelve long Guns Twenty-four Pounders (French), but she had only One Hundred and Twelve Men, Sixty of whom were Soldiers of the 72d Regiment of the Line. Between Thirty and Forty have been killed and wounded.

Meanwhile the Three Brigs completed the Defeat of the Enemy's Flotilla, but I lament to say that the immediate Proximity of the formidable Batteries whereunto we had now so nearly approached, prevented the Capture or Destruction of more of their Ships or Vessels. But no Blame can attach to any one on this Account; for all the Commanders, Officers and Crews did bravely and skilfully perform their Duty. If I may be permitted to mention those who served more immediately under my own Eye, I must eagerly and fully testify to the Merits of, and zealous Support I received from Mr. Greenlaw, the First Lieutenant of this Ship, as well as from all the excellent Officers of every Description, brave Seamen and Royal Marines, whom I have the Pride and Pleasure of commanding.

I have the Honour herewith to inclose Reports of our Loss, which I rejoice to find so comparatively trivial, and that Lieutenant Charles Cobb of the Castilian is the only Officer who has fallen.

I have the Honour to be, &c.

P. CARTERET, Captain.

I HAVE much Satisfaction in forwarding to you a Letter from Rear-Admiral Boyles, giving cover to one from Captain Napier, of His Majesty's Ship Thames, stating the Particulars of a very handsome Service which has been performed by him and Captain Clifford, of His Majesty's Brig Cephalus.

*Canopus, Palermo Bay,
July 28, 1811.*

SIR,

I HAVE the Honour to acquaint you of the Arrival here this Day of His Majesty's Ship Thames and Cephalus Sloop, bringing with them Eleven of the Enemy's Gun Boats, an armed Felucca, and Fifteen Merchant-Vessels, captured by them on the 21st Instant, in the Porto del Infreschi; also Thirty-six spars, intended for the Use of the Enemy's Line-of-Battle Ship and Frigate sitting at Naples; the Particulars of which Enterprize are contained in Captain Napier's Letter to me of the same Date, which I have the Honour herewith to enclose.

The complete Success of the above mentioned instantaneous and brilliant Attack on the Enemy's Convoy by the Thames and Cephalus reflects much Honour on the Conduct and Gallantry of Captains Napier and Clifford, their Officers and Crews.

I have the Honour to be, &c.

*His Majesty's Ship Thames, off Porto Del
SIR, Infreschi, July 21, 1811.*

CAPTAIN Clifford, of the Cephalus, having the Look-out off Paleniuro on the 20th Instant, informed me by a Sicilian Privateer, of a Convoy of Twenty-six Sail attempting to gain that Port, which he, with his usual Activity, prevented them from doing, and compelled them to take Shelter in Porto del Infreschi, off which Place we arrived at Five this Evening. I immediately desired Captain Clifford to lead in and anchor, which Service he performed in a most handsome Style, and was closely followed by this Ship, who soon silenced Eleven Gun-Boats, and an Armed Felucca carrying Six Eighteen-Pounders, Two Twelve Pounder Carronades, Three Brafs and Two Iron Six-Pounders, and Two Hundred and Eighty Men, moored across for the Protection of Fifteen Merchant Vessels, and Thirty-six Spars for the Line-of-Battle Ship and Frigate at Naples, and under Cover of a Round Tower, and the adjacent Hills lined with Musqueteers from the Merchantmen and Peafantry. The Marines were then landed under their Lieutenant, M'Adam, and got Possession of the Tower, performing the Light Infantry Manœuvres in a very pretty Style, taking an Officer and Eighty Prisoners, and driving the rest before them; the Boats, at the same Time, under Captain Clifford, took possession of the Convoy, together with all the Spars, except Two, which could not be got off; all of which were alongside, and the Ships under Weigh, in less than Two Hours, without the Loss of One Man, and only the Boatwain and another Man badly, and Three of the Brig's Men slightly, wounded: on entering the Bay her Sails and Rigging were a good deal cut up. The whole of the Officers and Ship's Company behaved in the most steady Manner; which ever reflects the greatest Credit on my Predecessor, Captain Waldegrave, for the excellent Discipline on board. Captain Clifford likewise speaks in the highest Terms of his First Lieutenant, Richardson, Officers, and Crew.

I have the Honour to be, &c.

Extract of a Letter from Captain Chamberlayne of His Majesty's Ship the Unité, addressed to Admiral Sir Charles Cotton, and transmitted by Vice-Admiral Sir Edward Pellew to John Wilson Croker Esq.

SIR,

I AM to acquaint you, that in complying with your Orders delivered to me by Captain Otway, of His Majesty's Ship Ajax, on the 2d Instant, I was led near the Roman Coast off Port Hercule, where a Brig being discovered at Anchor, at Daylight this Morning a Part of the Boats of this Ship under the Command of Lieutenant Crabb, accompanied by Second Lieutenant Victor, of the Royal Marines, Mr. M. Dwyer, and Mr. H. Collins, Master's Mate, and Mr. Hutchinson, Midshipman, were sent to bring her out. On approaching the Coast, they were vigorously attacked by the Brig, carrying Four Six-Pounders, Four Three-Pounders, and a Number of small Arms, protected by a Battery of Two Nine-Pounders on the Beach. Very light and variable Winds preventing the Ships closing, the Launch was detached, under the Command of Lieutenant M'Dougal, to support the other Boats; but ere she could reach them, the Crew had been beaten out of the Brig, her Guns dismounted, and the Boats were bringing her out in a very handsome Manner, under Showers of Grape from the Battery; at Seven she joined us, and I had the Satisfaction to find, that although the Vessel was materially damaged in her Hull, Masts, and Rigging, no Man was hurt. She proves to be the French Brig Saint François de Paule, partly laden with Ship Timber, of the largest Dimensions.

During this Affair a Sloop of War was observed to Leeward, and at Nine I was joined by His Majesty's Brig Cephalus. On proceeding along the Coast at Five P. M. several Vessels were discovered at Anchor, between Civita Vecchia, and the Mouth of the Tiber. Captain Clifford, in a most handsome Manner, instantly offered to lead into the Anchorage, and to head the Boats in performing any Service which might appear to me practicable; I therefore directed him to anchor the Cephalus as near the Battery and Vessels as possible, and to point out the Soundings by Signal, a Service he performed in a very masterly Style, bringing his Sloop up within the Range of Grape, under a Fire from Four Nine and Six-Pounders. The Unité being anchored shortly after in Four Fathoms Water, the Enemy were quickly driven from their Guns, and the Boats sent to Captain Clifford under those Officers who had distinguished themselves in the Morning, and Three Vessels, (the others proving Fishing-Boats,) were brought out under a smart Fire of Musketry from their Crews, and the Soldiers collected on a Height above them, with the same great good Fortune which had attended our previous Enterprize; the only Person hurt in either Ship being Mr. Simon, Master of the Cephalus, who was slightly wounded in the Face by a Grape Shot while bringing the Sloop to an Anchor. To Captain Clifford I feel much indebted for his Gallantry and able Assistance. He speaks in high Terms of his own Officers and Men, as well as those from this Ship, who were employed under him. Permit me to remark to you, Sir, that this is the Third Time within Two months I have had the Satisfaction to bear Testimony to the Zeal and Bravery of the Officers I have now mentioned."

Admiralty-Office, September 24, 1811.

VICE-ADMIRAL SIR EDWARD PELLEW has transmitted to this Office a Letter from the Honourable Captain Waldegrave, late commanding His Majesty's Ship the Thames (now in the Volontaire), giving an Account of the Destruction, on the 16th of June last, in the Gulph of Policastro, of Ten large armed Feluccas, on their way from Pizzo to Naples. They had been hauled up on the Beach, under Cetraro, where they were taken possession of under a heavy Fire of Musquetry, by a Detachment landed from the Thames and Cephalus, under the Direction of Lieutenant Whiteway, of the former, and set fire to and burnt, being found too large and heavily laden to allow of their being launched and brought away. In the performance of this Service one Midshipman (Mr. Cornwall) and Two Men only were wounded.
