THE following is a copy of a Bulletin of the operations of the Russian forces under General Winzingerode and General Essen, transmitted to John Wilson Croker, Esq. by Vice-Admiral Sir James Saunarez.

“Adjutant-General Barou Winzingerode to His Imperial Majesty, 28th September, from the village of Dawydowka, as follows:

“Without leaving the Twer road, I still occupy this village with the greatest part of my detachment, daily making reconnoissances with small parties on the roads to Woldomir, Yaroslaff, and Dimitroff, and even to Moskreensk and the neighbourhood of Moskaïsk. Every thing is well at all the advanced posts, and the enemy has shewn no disposition to advance.

“The detachment on the Wolodimir road, reported to me on the 25th September, that the enemy had appeared at Nowaja that day, twenty-four wersts from Moscow, but they had retired, and the Cossack patrols had reconnoitred on the Moscow road as far as the village of Jwanoff. The French picquets were five wersts from us; on the 27th September nothing new had occurred.

“On the Yaroslaff and Dimitroff roads, the enemy had made no movement on the 27th September, and our Cossacks maintained their posts, nor had the enemy moved on the St. Petersburg road. Colonel Howaisky (12), who commands my advanced guard, requested my permission to attack the French advanced posts, on the 26th, which he did at the village of Chinka, repulsed them and pursued them one werst, taking one officer, and two hundred and seventy men, prisoners; their loss in killed was heavy, but on our side the loss is not worth naming.

“Colonel Benkendorf, who is stationed with a detachment between Wolokalamsk and Moskaïsk, pushed his patrols right and left on the road to Smolensk, and has sent in about one hundred prisoners.”
