To His Royal Highness the PRINCE REGENT.

WE, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Oxford, beg leave to approach your Royal Highness for the purpose of expressing our grateful and lasting sense of the consideration which your Royal Highness has given us in the eyes of foreign nations, as well as of the British empire, by your recent visit to the University.

The interest which your Royal Highness has thus manifested in our prosperity and honour, and the very gracious and condescending manner in which your Royal Highness has been pleased to accept our humble endeavours to testify to your Royal Highness our devoted attachment, cannot fail to animate us to such a discharge of our respective duties as shall be most conducive to the public good; we are assured, that we can in no other way so effectually recommend ourselves to the continuance of your Royal Highness's favour and protection.

Given at our House of Convocation, under our common seal, this 1st day of July, in the year of our Lord 1814.

His Royal Highness was pleased to return the following most gracious Answer to the above Address:

"The reception which I experienced on my late visit to the University of Oxford, was, in every respect, most gratifying to me.

"I had great satisfaction in presenting to the notice of the illustrious personages, who accompanied me, the venerable establishments for which you are distinguished. They were not insensible to the effects of your liberal institutions, in the orderly, yet animated, expression of public feeling, called forth on that memorable occasion.

"To me they were peculiarly interesting, as I deeply feel how much the best interests of the country are involved in the success of your exertions, to provide for the Church and State, their future ornaments and support."

To His Royal Highness the PRINCE REGENT.

WE, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Oxford, beg leave most humbly to offer to your Royal Highness our warmest congratulations on the re-establishment of general tranquillity in Europe. It is with the highest satisfaction that we look back upon the unshaken constancy with which this long and arduous contest has been maintained by the British crown, and that we behold the glory which its final issue has reflected on the British character: distant ages will contemplate with admiration the virtues which our country has displayed throughout this trying season, the wisdom and energy, the good faith and moderation of our national councils; the unconquerable skill and valour of His Majesty's fleets and armies; and those exalted talents which have led them to victory.

Nor will less honour be ascribed to the undaunted firmness and perseverance of a free people, supporting every sacrifice, and braving every danger in defence of their religion and government. By the blessing of Providence on His Majesty's exertions, and on those of your Royal Highness, in so just a cause, an insurmountable barrier has, we trust, been opposed both to the desolating progress of anarchy, and to the victorious career of military despotism.

While we thus recognise with devout and humble gratitude, the gracious interposition of that Almighty Power, which has crowned these noble efforts with final and complete success, we derive from this consideration fresh motives for the zealous discharge of our own peculiar duties; labouring with unremitting care to promote the inseparable interests of religion and learning; and to train up our youth in such principles and rules of conduct as are best calculated to obtain for them, and through them for our country, the continuance of the same Divine protection, and the permanence of the same blessings.

Given at our House of Convocation, under our common seal, this 1st day of July, in the year of our Lord 1814.

His Royal Highness was pleased to return the following most gracious Answer to the above Address:

"I return you my warmest thanks for your congratulations on the re-establishment of the general tranquillity of Europe.

"In contemplating the attainment of the great objects for which we have been contending, I recognise, with humble gratitude, the signal reward with which a gracious Providence has blessed the unparalleled exertions of this country. Throughout an arduous and momentous struggle, His Majesty's people have bravely manifested all those qualities which the circumstances of the time peculiarly called for, and which the influence of a free constitution is eminently calculated to produce.

"I have the firmest persuasion, that, in the discharge of your important duties, it will be your first object and constant endeavour, to instil into the minds of the youth entrusted to your care,
