

At the entrance of the antichamber, the procession was received by the Count de Goltz, Marshal of the Court, and by him conducted, with the usual reverences, into the Hall of Audience, where His Royal Highness the Prince Sovereign was attended by His Royal Highness the Hereditary Prince of Orange, by the Great Officers, Foreign Ministers, and a numerous Court of Ladies and Gentlemen of distinction.

Garter, after a short address to the Prince Sovereign, expressive of the object of the mission, delivered to Viscount Castlereagh the Sovereign's letter of credence, which his Lordship presented to His Royal Highness.

The book of the statutes was, in like manner, presented to His Royal Highness.

And His Royal Highness having delivered to the first Plenipotentiary a certificate of his acceptance of the Order under the usual reservations, and the nomination of his proxy for his installation, the Plenipotentiaries invested His Royal Highness with the garter, and, then, with the ribband and George; His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge being pleased to assist in the ceremony; and Garter pronouncing the respective admonitions.

The Plenipotentiaries thereupon presented the stars of the Order to His Royal Highness.

After a congratulatory address from Garter to the Prince Sovereign, His Royal Highness received the congratulations of His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, and of the Foreign Ministers and other persons of distinction present.

The Prince Sovereign gave a grand dinner, after the ceremony, to His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, the Plenipotentiaries, and the Noblemen and Gentlemen who had been present at the investiture: and His Royal Highness appeared on that occasion in the ensigns of the Most Noble Order.

On this day, soon after the ceremony of the investiture of His Royal Highness the Prince Sovereign of the United Provinces of the Netherlands with the ensigns of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, His Royal Highness the Hereditary Prince of Orange was invested by Viscount Castlereagh with the ensigns of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, in the manner following:

The Prince Sovereign being in the Hall of Audience, surrounded by his Court, and having, on his right hand, His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, and, on his left, the Viscount Castlereagh, Garter King of Arms standing near his Lordship; His Royal Highness the Hereditary Prince of Orange was introduced into the presence, preceded by Francis Townsend, Esq. Deputy Bath King of Arms, in the mantle, and bearing the sceptre of Bath, and by George Frederick Beltz, Esq. Gentleman Usher of the Order, wearing his chain and badge; the former carrying, on a cushion, the ribband and badge; and the latter carrying the book of the statutes and two stars of the Order.

The Viscount Castlereagh having, in an address to the Hereditary Prince, stated to His Royal Highness the reasons which had induced His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, Sovereign of the Order, to confer upon him this honourable mark of the sense entertained by the Prince Regent of the gallantry with which the Hereditary Prince had distinguished himself on various occasions during the war in the Peninsula; Deputy Bath presented the ribband and badge (the Hereditary Prince being already a Knight), and Lord Castlereagh invested His Royal Highness therewith. Deputy Bath then presented the book of the statutes and the stars, which were severally delivered by his Lordship to His Royal Highness; who, being thus invested, received thereupon the congratulations of the Prince Sovereign, of His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, and of the Great Officers, Ministers, and Court.
