We cannot close this Address without expressing 1 our earnest hopes that we may have the happiness of witnessing in your Serene Highness as early an alleviation of your sufferings as the magnitude of the calamity will admit of, and that the country which has been equally the scene of your comforts and your affliction, may still have the just pride and satisfaction of retaining within it, the bright and salutary example of your virtues.

To His Serene Highness Prince Leopold, of Saxe-Cobourg, &c. &c.

WE, the Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of the Royal Burgh of Kirkaldy, in Council assembled, respectfully solicit permission to offer to your Serene Highness the assurance of our unfeigned sympathy and condolence on that affecting event which so peculiarly interests your Serene Highness, and which has plunged the people of the British empire in the deepest sorrow.

We are unwilling to intrude upon your Serene Highness in this hour of distress, but if the poignancy of grief can be in any degree alleviated by a participation in it, the sympathy of a whole nation may afford some, however inadequate, consolation to your Serene Highness.

We are anxious to testify to your Serene Highness the sense which we have of those qualities which have so endeared you to this country, and we shall always feel the utmost solicitude for your Serene Highness's future welfare and prosperity.

Signed in name, and by appointment of the Magistrates, and Town Council of the Royal Burgh of Kirkaldy, in Council assembled, this 23d day of December 1817.
