

and for that relief from the present distresses of the country of which their nature will admit.

To these distresses we are not less feelingly alive than the most clamorous of our fellow subjects, who, by inflaming the passions and misleading the judgment of the ignorant and unwary, aggravate the evils they affect to deplore. That the safety and honour of your Majesty's Throne and the unrivalled excellence of our admirable Constitution may remain unimpaired to the latest posterity, shall be our constant and most fervent prayer.

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

The dutiful and loyal Address of the undersigned Inhabitants and Visitants of the Town of Cheltenham and its Vicinity.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, the undersigned, Inhabitants and Visitants of the Town of Cheltenham and its Vicinity, beg leave to approach your royal presence with renewed assurances of our inviolate attachment to your sacred Person and Government.

We beg to assure your Majesty, that we have witnessed with the deepest sorrow and indignation the attempts which have been made, under specious pretexts, aided by a blasphemous and licentious press, to excite discontent and encourage infidelity and disloyalty, to the total subversion of our glorious and unrivalled Constitution in Church and State.

Under this conviction we feel impelled, by the strongest sense of what we owe to your sacred Majesty, as well as to ourselves, to avow, at this momentous crisis, our firm and unalterable resolution to support, by our most strenuous exertion, your Majesty's constitutional authority and dignity, and to promote among our fellow subjects the same spirit of affection and loyalty by which we ourselves are actuated.

We earnestly hope that the blessing of Providence will attend every effort of your Majesty to restore peace and confidence among us, and that your Majesty may long reign over a free and united people.

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

The humble and dutiful Address of the Provost, Magistrates, and Councillors of the Royal Burgh of Dumbarton.

WE, your Majesty's faithful subjects, the Provost, Magistrates, and Council of the Royal Burgh of Dumbarton, beg leave humbly to approach the Throne with unfeigned expressions of our unabated loyalty, and sincere attachment to your Majesty's Person and Government.

When the efforts of the wicked and the factions are daily exerted to delude and influence the multitude, with the almost avowed purpose of subverting the Constitution under which this country has so long enjoyed blessings inestimable and unexampled; and when in aid of this design the basest attempts are continually made to loosen in the minds of the community the moral restraints of religion, and to deprive them of its hopes and consolation; we feel it our imperative duty, in common with a great majority of our fellow subjects, to express our firm determination to counteract, by every mean in our power, the designs of the impious and disaffected; and with our utmost energy to maintain the rights and dignity of the Crown, and the authority of the Laws, as the safeguard of that rational liberty we enjoy, and which is the pride and ornament of the country.

Signed in name, and by appointment of the other Magistrates and Councillors, and the Corporation seal ordered to be appended hereto, at Dumbarton, the 5th day of January 1821 years, by John Daxen, Provost.

[Transmitted by the Duke of Montrose, K. G.]

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

WE, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the undersigned Inhabitants of the ancient Town and Parish of Barking, in the County of Essex, beg leave at this important crisis to approach your Majesty with the assurance of our inviolable fidelity to your Majesty's sacred Person, and of our unalterable attachment to the Constitution of the country as by law established.

When the intemperate machinations of a disloyal and desperate faction, assisted by the licentiousness of an unbridled and profligate press, are unceasingly employed to seduce the people from their allegiance, and to eradicate by the most poisonous doctrines all sense of religion from their minds, we feel imperiously called upon, as dutiful and loyal subjects, to make an explicit declaration of our sentiments, by assuring your Majesty of our determination to rally round the Altar and the Throne, and to exert every means in our power to preserve inviolate our glorious and hitherto unsullied Constitution. Conscious that the clamour which, with unwearied industry, has been raised by designing demagogues against all the constituted Authorities of the State is in direct opposition to the legitimate opinion of the nation, we feel confident that it is only necessary for the well-disposed part of the community to evince a firm and determined spirit of resistance to the enemies of the public peace in order to frustrate their designs, which, if silently permitted to gather strength, may ultimately terminate in the destruction of all that we reverence as Christians, and all that we venerate as Britons.

Warned then, but not dismayed, by the progress which moral and political licentiousness has already made, we desire to avow our firm reliance on the vigour and promptitude of your Majesty's Councils, seconded by the loyal dispositions of your faithful subjects, to defeat the traitorous attempts of these our internal enemies; and we beg, Sire, to express the fullest confidence, that, in adopting every necessary measure for the protection of the dignity and the constitutional prerogatives of the Throne, your Majesty's paternal solicitude will be extended to the preservation of those rights and privileges which we inherit from our forefathers, and which
