

produced great distress and excitement in this once happy and peaceful country.

They beg most respectfully and humbly to request the exercise of your Majesty's authority to obtain for them an immediate remission of those taxes which are most felt by the labouring and industrious classes, such as the imposts on malt, soap, and candles, with a reduction of those on tea and sugar; they are also desirous of the repeal of the whole of the assessed taxes, and instead thereof, that the necessities of the State should be supplied by a graduated property tax, which would relieve the farmer and tradesman, enable them to give more employment to the industrious classes, and, where necessary, to increase the rate of wages.

That they look forward with hope and confidence to the ministry just formed under the auspices of your Majesty (combining, as it does, so many men of rank and talent who have on many occasions proved themselves the friends of the people) and doubt not they will have your Majesty's sanction and support in the attempt to remedy (as far as is consistent with the safety of the State) the evils complained of, which will insure to them the united and determined support of those on whose authority I presume to deliver this Address, forming a large portion of the brave, patient, industrious, spirited, and still loyal population of Wiltshire.

Should the great measure of reform in Parliament which now agitates all classes in the State, prove full and efficient, it will never be forgotten that for so happy a change to you, Sire, would your people be indebted; you would unite all hearts in affection and gratitude, and thus, besides being the most powerful and generous, you would be the most happy of Sovereigns.

Having thus, with deep felt respect, discharged my duty to my Country, and to a Sovereign who I pray God may long continue to reign over us, I humbly subscribe myself your Majesty's most dutiful, devoted, and loyal subject,

John Thomas Mayne.

- To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

WE, your Majesty's loyal and dutiful subjects, the undersigned Magistrates, Clergy, Merchants, Bankers, Householders, Freeholders, Free Burgesses, and Inhabitants of the City of Bristol, and its vicinity, alarmed at the dangers to which the country is exposed by the spread of revolutionary principles, and anxious to avert, as much as in us lies, the calamities which a reckless spirit of innovation is labouring to draw down upon this hitherto favoured land, intreat permission most respectfully to submit to your Majesty, in this our loyal and dutiful address, the reasons of our appeal, and the grounds upon which our apprehensions are founded.
