Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, your Majesty's loyal and dutiful subjects, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses, of the ancient town and borough of Ipswich, now assembled in Council, crave leave to approach your Majesty, to offer our honest and affectionate congratulations on your Majesty's accession to the Throne of these realms.

In your Majesty we behold a Queen born and bred amongst us; a loyal and affectionate people have regarded, with grateful admiration, and with an intense interest, proportioned to the high duties which your Majesty was destined to fulfil, the devotion of your illustrious Parent to the promotion of those attainments, and to the culture and direction of those virtues which would shed a lustre around the Throne, and diffuse happiness amongst your faithful subjects.

The first gracious declaration from your Majesty's lips, " That it would be your Majesty's unceasing study to maintain the reformed religion as by law established, securing at the same time to all the full enjoyment of religious liberty," has been hailed in every part of this great empire with surpassing satisfaction. This prompt and magnanimous recognition of the great leading principle of our admirable con-stitution is enthusiastically accepted by a loyal and intelligent nation as the harbinger of a wise and beneficent Governmeut, and as an indication of a reign that will fill some of the brightest pages of future history.

That your Majesty, under Divine Providence, may be long spared to us, and that the virtues and happiness of your private life, and the glory and prosperity of your benign rule over a free and grateful people may be the lasting theme of eulogy is the unfeigned prayer and the confident expectation pervading all classes in your Majesty's dominions; in that prayer and expectation no portion of your Majesty's people
