To Captains of Vessels, Mariners, &c.—January, 1819.

A PERSON, named Michael Cockerill, then aged about 24, sailed from London in the Brig Ann, Captain Sunley, but in what capacity is not known, to, and arrived at, the Havannah, in April following. When the vessel left London she had on board the following persons:—Thomas Sunley, master; David May, mate; William Quince, carpenter; John Hale, cook; Thomas Newton, apprentice and nephew to the master; John Weyman, cabin boy; and five men obtained from a registry-office in the Commercial-road, kept by a Mr. Deudney. By the Captain's letter from the Downs, dated February 2, 1819, it appears he changed four men at Gravesend, and directs his owners not to pay an order he had given to one of them, named Thomas Clark. The vessel finally sailed from the Motherbank, February 25th, 1819, and arrived at the Havannah April 21 following. Under date of the 4th of May, Captain Sunley writes, "four of the crew have deserted," and mentions mate and carpenter being on board. Under date of 26th of May, he states, one man having died, so they only mustered six in number, supposed to be himself, mate, carpenter, cook, and the two boys. Under the date of the 11th of June 1819, he advises sailing from the Havannah for Matanzas, having first shipped five men at the Havannah, who all deserted at Matanzas. By a variety of subsequent accounts it appears, that the Ann sailed from Matanzas on the 26th of June 1819, three days after was taken by a piratical sloop, the crew of which inhumanly murdered the captain, mate, carpenter, and one man ill in bed; the remaining crew, four men and the two boys, escaped. The names of these appear to have been William Smith, boatswain; John Furlong, James Carland, and John Vanson, mariners; and Thomas Newton and John Weyman, the boys. Whoever can give information whether the said Michael Cockerill be living or dead will be rewarded for their trouble by applying to Messrs. Tebbs and Sons, Proctors, Doctors'-commons, London.
