Hamburg, Decemb. 7. The late violent Storms have occasioned such terrible Inundations of Water in these Parts, That the like have not been known in the Memory of Man. The Dykes were not able to stand against the Force of the Water, which breaking through all that was in its way, has drowned the Countrey for many Miles together, and swept away a great number of Houses, and some whole Villages, and many People and Cattle have perished. Several little Islands in the River Elbe have been quite overflowed; About Staden and Gluckstadt, the Countrey lies all under Water, and the Fortifications of the last of these places have, it's said, suffered very much; In this City most of the Chimnies are blown down, several Houses uncovered, and abundance of Goods and Merchandizes which were in the Cellars and Lower Rooms spoiled. In a word, the Misery, as well as Damage, caused by this Inundation, is very great. The States have given the Heer Moering their Resident at the Court of Denmark, Leave to return home. We have an account from Gluckstadt, Bremen, Staden and Hamburg, of a great inundation that happened in those Parts the last Week, occasioned by a great Storm, which continued two days together. The Water broke through the great Dyke of Staden, as well as through several others, in many places, the Villages of Batenkrug and Groverort, are quite destroyed, and a great many People and Cattle have been drowned. The Wind was so violent, That it tore up many great Trees by the Roots, and beat down divers Houses.
