

SUPPLEMENT

TO

The London Gazette

Of TUESDAY the 3rd of JULY.

Published by Authority.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 4, 1855.

War-Department, July 4, 1855.

LORD PANMURE has this day received a Despatch and its Enclosures, of which the following are copies, addressed to His Lordship by the late Field-Marshal the Lord Raglan, G.C.B.

*Before Sevastopol,

MY LORD,

I INFORMED your Lordship in my despatch of the 19th instant, that I would make a more special report upon the movements of the 3rd Division, as soon as I should receive the reports of Lieutenant-General Sir R. England, and the Major-Generals commanding brigades under him.

The 1st Brigade, under Major-General Barnard, proceeded down the Woronzow-road, and was placed in position on the right of the ravine, ready to co-operate with the columns of attack on the right; whilst the 2nd Brigade, under Major-General Eyre, moved down the ravine which separates the left of the English from the right of the French advanced works, for the purpose of attacking the enemy's ambuscades, and making a demonstration on the head of the dockyard creek.

This service was performed with the utmost gallantry, and notwithstanding that they were exposed to a most galling fire, the troops maintained themselves in the position they had taken up during the day, and in the evening withdrew unmolested, leaving a post at the cemetery, which had been one of the objects of the attack in the morning. The action having from circumstances become a most serious one, I beg, as the most satisfactory way of making your Lordship acquainted with the particulars, to lay a copy of the Major-General's letter before your Lordship, and to solicit your attention to the officers whose services he particularly notices, and at the same time to his own distinguished conduct.

Your Lordship will see with concern that the loss sustained by this brigade is very considerable, and that Major-General Eyre is himself wounded; but I have every reason to hope that the injury he has received is not very severe, and will not incapacitate him from the discharge of his duty with the same energy and devotion as he has already applied himself to its performance during the protracted operations before Sevastopol.

Lieutenant-General Sir G. Brown, to whose able assistance I referred in my former despatch, has specially brought to my notice the distinguished conduct of Colonel Yea, who was unfortunately killed, and pays a just tribute to the great merits of this deeply lamented officer; of Lieutenant-Colonel Lysons, of the 23rd; Lieutenant-Colonel Johnstone, of the 33rd; and Captain Gwilt of the 34th, all of whom are wounded; of Major-General Codrington, who commanded the Light Division; of Captain Blackett, of the Rifle Brigade, who has lost a leg; and of Captain Forman, of the Rifle Brigade, who fell upon the occasion; and Major-General Codrington mentions the admirable conduct of Captain Turner, of the 7th Foot; Major Macdonell, of the Rifle Brigade; Lieutenant Knox, of the Rifle Brigade, who is wounded; and Lieutenant Donovan, of the 33rd.

Lieutenant-General Sir R. England speaks highly of Colonel Cobbe, of the 4th Regiment, who commanded in the trenches of the left attack, and is severely wounded; and Lieutenant-General Bentinck eulogizes the conduct of Colonel Lord West, of the 21st Foot, who assumed the command of the left column after the death of Major-General Sir J. Campbell; of Lieutenant-Colonel Warre, who succeeded to the command of the 57th Regiment, on the death of Colonel Shadforth; of Lieutenant-Colonel Cole, commanding 17th Regiment; and of Captains Croker (who was killed) Gordon, McKiustry, and O'Connor, and Lieutenant Thompson, of the 17th Regiment; and Lieutenant Shadwell Clerke, of the 21st Regiment; and Colour-Serjeant Colcliffe and Serjeant Pratt, of the 17th; and Captain the Honourable J. Stuart, and Lieutenants Boileau (who is severely wounded) and Saunders, of the Rifle Brigade.

Major-General H. Jones reports most favourably of the services of the following officers of Engineers: Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon, Lieutenant-Colonel Chapman, Lieutenant-Colonel Tyl- den, Lieutenant Donnelly, Lieutenant Fisher, and he deeply laments the loss of Captain Jesse, Lieutenant Graves, and Lieutenant Murray, who fell upon the occasion.

I must express my obligations to Lieutenant-General Sir R. England, Lieutenant-General Pennefather, Lieutenant-General Bentinck, and Major-General Codrington, for the able manner in which they conducted their duties; and I avail myself of the present opportunity to inform your Lordship, that Lieutenant-General Pennefather, who was then labouring under illness, is now in so bad a state of health as to be under the necessity of withdrawing from the army. I shall deeply regret his departure, entertaining the highest opinion of him, and knowing his devotion to Her Majesty's service.

I must not omit to mention the following officers of the Royal Navy, who particularly distinguished themselves on the 18th: Captain Peel, who commanded the whole of the sailors employed, and is severely wounded; Messrs. Wood (severely wounded) and Daniel, who have been through the whole siege; Lieutenants Urmston and Dalyell, who are both severely wounded; and Mr. Parsons, Mate, who is wounded; Lieutenants Cave and Kidd, both wounded, the latter mortally; and Mr. Kennedy, Mate.

I enclose the returns of casualties from the 18th to the 21st.

I have, &c.

RAGLAN.

The Lord Panmure, &c. &c. &c.

Enclosure 1.

*Camp before Sevastopol,
June 19, 1855.*

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of Lieutenant-General Sir Richard England, K.C.B., commanding the division, that, agreed to his instructions, I moved off yesterday morning between one and two o'clock A.M. with my brigade, consisting of the 9th, 18th, 28th, 38th, and 44th Regiments—total strength about 2,000 bayonets, and proceeded down the ravine on our left, by the French Picquet-house, for the purpose of attacking the enemy's ambuscades, and of making a demonstration on that side.

In attacking the first of these ambuscades we were anticipated by the French, who cleverly took them on their left flank as we advanced in front, and made several prisoners. Beyond this the French had no instructions to co-operate with us; I, therefore, immediately pushed on an advanced guard under Major Fielden, 44th Regiment, composed of marksmen from each regiment, supporting it on the right by the 44th and 38th Regiments, and on the left by the 18th Regiment, keeping at first the 9th and 28th Regiments in reserve.

The enemy, whose strength I could not estimate, occupied a strong position; their right rested on a Mamelon, their left on a Cemetery. These points were occupied by marksmen.

The intervening ground was intersected and the road barricaded with stone walls, which our men were obliged to pull down, under fire, before they could advance.

In rear of this position, towards the fortress, the enemy occupied several houses, and there were bodies of the enemy seen in rear, as reserves, but of what strength I could not say. This position, under the fire of the guns of the fortress, was strong, and we could not expect to carry it and retain it without sustaining a considerable loss, and which, I regret to state, we have experienced both in officers and men; but it is gratifying to feel that they all most nobly performed their duty on this occasion. The 18th Regiment pushed on, and occupied some houses immediately under the Garden-wall Battery.

The 44th occupied some houses on the right, from whence they kept up a fire on the enemy's embrasures. Lieutenant-Colonel Lowth moved on with his regiment (the 38th), and after taking possession of some houses in front, endeavoured to turn the flank of a battery which annoyed us in front. These parties were afterwards from time to time reinforced or relieved by the 9th Regiment, the 28th Regiment being drawn up in line in rear to support the whole.

Having driven the enemy from these points, I continued to occupy them, with the view to ulterior movements, in the event of the attack on the right being successful, and until it was decided what portion of the ground should be retained for siege operations.

I cannot sufficiently express my sense of the conduct of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, on this occasion. They attacked the enemy in the first instance with the utmost gallantry, holding their ground until late in the evening, although exposed all day to a concentrated fire from the guns of the fortress, in addition to which I believe the enemy brought up some field-guns, and kept continually firing shells. The losses occasioned were considerable, the total being 31 officers, 44 serjeants, and 487 rank and file, killed or wounded.

At about five o'clock in the evening, after giving orders for the removal of the wounded to the rear, the gradual withdrawal of the parties from the front—the ground being too far in advance to be permanently occupied for siege operations,—I gave over the command of the brigade to Lieutenant-Colonel Adams, 28th Regiment, having received a wound in the head in the early part of the day, which prevented me latterly from attending properly to my duties. The enemy did not attempt to molest the troops on retiring. The conduct of all was so exemplary during this trying day, that I can scarcely with justice particularize individuals. I beg, however, to thank the officers commanding corps for the assistance they afforded me, viz., Lieutenant-Colonel Borton, commanding 9th Regiment; Lieutenant-Colonel Edwards, commanding the 18th Royal Irish; Lieutenant-Colonel Adams, commanding the 28th Regiment; Colonel the Honourable A. Spencer, commanding the 44th Regiment, who was wounded; and to Lieutenant-Colonel Starcley, who succeeded to the command of the regiment on Colonel Spencer being obliged to quit the field; Lieutenant-Colonel Lowth, commanding 38th Regiment, who was also wounded, and to Lieutenant-Colonel Sparks, who succeeded him in the command of the regiment; and Major Fielden, 44th, commanding the advanced guard.

I received also the utmost assistance from my Brigade-Major Captain Faussett, 44th Regiment, and also on this, as on many other occasions from my Aide-de-Camp Captain Robertson, 4th Regiment. I was also indebted to Brevet-Major Stuart Wortley, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, who kindly volunteered to act on my Staff.

I beg also to report the judicious arrangements of the Medical Department on this occasion, and especially to thank Assistant-Surgeon John Gibbons, 44th Regiment, and Assistant-Surgeon Jeeves, 38th Regiment, for their zealous and humane exertions in the field, while exposed to a most galling fire.

I have, &c.,
(Signed) WM. EYRE,
Major-General.
