

SUPPLEMENT
TO
The London Gazette

Of TUESDAY the 17th of JULY.

Published by Authority.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 18, 1855.

War-Department, July 18, 1855.

LORD PANMURE has this day received a Despatch and its Enclosures, of which the following are copies, addressed to his Lordship by Lieutenant-General Simpson, Commanding Her Majesty's Forces in the East.

*Before Sevastopol,
July 7, 1855.*

MY LORD,

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that the remains of our late lamented Commander-in-Chief, Field-Marshal Lord Raglan, were removed from Head-quarters to Kazatch Bay, on Tuesday the 3rd instant, and placed on board Her Majesty's ship "Caradoc," which departed for England that same evening.

Nothing could be more imposing than the whole line of this melancholy procession. The day was fine, and the appearance of the Allied troops splendid; as many as could be spared from duty in the trenches, and with safety to their camp, were collected, and the procession moved from the door of this house exactly at four o'clock p.m., in the following order :

In the court-yard of the house was stationed a guard of honour of one hundred men of the Grenadier Guards, with their drums and regimental colours; fifty men, with one field officer, one captain, and one subaltern, from the Royal Sappers and Miners and from each regiment, lined the road from the British to the French Head-quarters, a distance of about a mile; a squadron of cavalry was stationed on the right of the line, two batteries of artillery and a squadron of cavalry on the left of it; the infantry were commanded by Major-General Eyre, C.B.

The road from the French Head-quarters to Kazatch Bay, was lined throughout the whole way by the infantry of the French Imperial Guard, and of the 1st Corps; bands were stationed at intervals and played as the procession passed, and field batteries (French) at intervals, on the high grounds right and left of the road, fired minute guns.

The procession to escort the body was as follows :

- Two squadrons British Cavalry (12th Lancers).
- Two squadrons Piedmontese Light Cavalry.
- Four squadrons French Chasseurs d'Afrique (1st and 4th Regiments).
- Four squadrons French Cuirassiers (2nd and 9th Regiments).
- Two troops French Horse Artillery.
- Major Brandling's troop Horse Artillery.

The coffin, covered with a black pall, fringed with white silk, and the Union Jack, and surmounted by the late Field-Marshal's cocked hat and sword, and a garland of "Immortels," placed there by General Pelissier, was carried on a platform, fixed upon a 9-pounder gun, drawn by horses of Captain Thomas's troop Royal Horse Artillery.

At the wheels of the gun-carriage rode General Pelissier, Commander-in-Chief of the French Army, His Highness Omer Pacha, Commander-in-Chief of the Ottoman Army, General Della Marmora, Commander-in-Chief of the Sardinian Army, and Lieutenant-General Simpson, Commander-in-Chief of the English Army.

Charger of the late Field-Marshal, led by two mounted orderlies.

Relations and Personal Staff of the late Field-Marshal.

Generals and other Officers of the French, Sardinian, and Turkish Armies,—a large number of whom attended.

British Commissioners to Foreign Armies.

British General Officers and their Staffs.

Staff of Head-quarters.

One Officer of each regiment of Cavalry and Infantry, Royal Sappers and Miners, and Land Transport Corps; two from the Naval Brigade, Royal Marines, Medical and Commissariat Staff; and three from the Royal Artillery.

Personal escorts of the Allied Commanders-in-Chief.

The personal escort of the late Field-Marshal (Captain Chetwode's troop of the 8th Hussars).

A field battery of the Royal Artillery.

Two squadrons of British Cavalry (4th Dragoon Guards).

Detachment of Mounted Staff Corps.

The escort was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Dupuis, Royal Horse Artillery.

Two field batteries of the Royal Artillery, stationed on the hill opposite the house, fired a salute of nineteen guns, when the procession moved off.

The united bands of the 3rd, 9th, and 62nd Regiments, stationed in the vineyard that surrounds the house, played the Dead March.

The band of the Sardinian Grenadiers was stationed half way to the French Head-quarters, and the band of the 10th Hussars on the left of the line.

The approach to the wharf at Kazatch Bay was lined by detachments of the Royal Marines and sailors.

The body was received on the wharf by Admiral Bruat and Rear-Admiral Stewart, C.B., and a large number of officers of the combined fleets. The launch of the British flag ship, towed by man-of-war boats, conveyed the coffin to the "Caradoc," the boats of the combined fleets forming an escort; and the troop and battery of the Royal Artillery included in the escort, formed upon the rising ground above the bay, and fired a salute of nineteen guns as the coffin left the shore.

Everything was well conducted, and no accident occurred.

Thus terminated the last honours that could be paid by his troops to their beloved commander. His loss to us here is inexpressible; and will, I am sure, be equally felt by his country at home. The sympathy of our Allies is universal and sincere. His name and memory are all that remain to animate us in the difficulties and dangers to which we may be called.

I have, &c.,

JAMES SIMPSON,
Lieutenant-General Commanding.

The Lord Panmure, &c. &c. &c.
