Salisbury, Novemb, 11.

ON Monday last, the Lord Cornbury pretending to have received Orders from His Majesty, caused the Royal Regiment of Horse, the Royal Regiment of Dragoons, whereof he was Colonel, and the Duke of St. Alban's Regiment of Horse commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Langston, to march from hence to Dorchester, where they refreshed themselves, and then went on to Bridport and Axminster. Several of the Officers apprehending some Treachery, asked my Lord Cornbury Whither they were going? who answered, To beat up the Enemies Quarters at Honiton; but finding the Royal Regiment of Horse, and several Officers of the Dragoons did more and more suspect the Treason, he marched with the Officers and Dragoons that would follow him towards Honiton, Lieutenant Colonel Langston marching before with the Regiment of St. Alban's. And the Royal Regiment of Horse, and the rest of the Dragoons marched back towards Bridport, being very much wearied by their long Marches, and put into some disorder by so great a Treachery. The Earl of Feversham, Lieutenant General of his Majesties Forces arrived here Yesterday.

Salisbury, Nov. 15. All the Royal Regiment of Horse, both Officers and Soldiers, are returned hither, except one Lieutenant and two Cornets and some few Troopers who are still missing. The Regiment of St. Alban's commanded by Langston, and the Lord Cornbury with part of the Dragoons marched directly into Honiton, the Enemies Quarter. Sir Hugh Middleton, a Captain in the Regiment of St. Alban's, having made his Escape, is likewise returned, and declares that all the Dragoons are come off, except an Advanced Detachment consisting of eight out of each Troop; And that such Officers and Troopers, of those that were betrayed into the Enemies Quarters, as would not take Service with them are stript, and their Horses taken from them. Capt. Smith of the said Regiment, did not march with it from hence, being lame. Major Littleton, Major of the Royal Regiment of Horse, is just now arrived here, and assures us, there are not 10 Troopers wanting of the said Regiment, which sufficiently shews how firm they are in their Fidelity to His Majesty. And about 50 Troopers of the Regiment of St. Alban's are come back. The Earl of Feversham sent this Morning a Party to Blandford, and another to Warminster.

Florence, Octob. 29. The Marquis Corsini Ambassador Extraordinary from our Great Duke to the Elector of Bavaria, parted from hence yesterday for Municke, to make the solemn Demand of the Princess Yolande Beatrix, for the Prince of Tuscany, and to conduct her hither, where she is expected about the end of December. The Officers of her House will begin their Journey the next Week to receive the Princess at Mittevaldt, on the Frontiers of Bavaria.

Venice, Octob. 30. A Vessel is arrived here from Corfu, which met the Gallies of Malta in their return home. The last advice from Negrepoint is, that all things were ready for a general Assault.

Vienna, Novemb. 4. The last Letters from Belgrade inform us, That General Capara had been again to visit Semandria; That Major-General Hensler was still in the Field with the Troops under his Command, to secure the Country-People against the Excursions of the Turks, who continue to raine the Frontiers, that the Imperialists may not draw from thence any Forage or Provisions for their Substence; That Teckley was with a small Body of Turks
