

vessels can pass directly from the one to the other taking care not to proceed beyond the intersection. Proceeding up the river, the lights should be kept in line until Fort Mifflin Bar Low Leading Light is visible, when the course should be altered two points to port.

The western high light, which, kept in line with the low light, leads through the Cut over Fort Mifflin Bar, is a fixed red light, elevated 53 feet above high water, and visible through an arc of 120°; it is shown from a frame structure with frame tower attached; the house and tower are painted white; lantern black. These leading lights should be kept in line, when proceeding down the river, until Tincum Island High Leading Light is visible, when the course should be altered one and a half points to starboard—proceeding up the river, they should be kept in line to the point of intersection with the Schuylkill Leading Lights.

The illuminating apparatus of each of these three lights is catadioptric, or by reflectors and lenses, of the fifth order.
