SPEECH

Of His Grace the Earl of MELVIL,

His MAJESTIES High-Commissioner to the PARLIAMENT of SCOTLAND,

Edinburgh, April 15. 1690.

Published by Authority.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

HIS Session of Parliament had been Honoured with the Presence of in Royal Master, had not the great weight of Affairs on His Hand, the meeting of the Parliament of England, and the designed Expedition into Ireland, deprived you of that Happiness and Satisfaction He rally intended for you.

And tho' He still resolves, so soon as His important Affairs can allow Him, visit this His Ancient Kingdom; yet, such a Regard hath He, to what may for the Satisfaction of His People, that He would no longer delay your Meetin for giving such a Settlement to this Nation, as may be a real Security to its more valuable Concerns of True Religion, and Just Liberty.

valuable Concerns of True Religion, and Just Liberty.

Can you restect upon the great Things that He, as the Instrument in the Hand of God, hath done for you? Can you think of those imminent Danger to which (when living in the greatest Honour, Plenty, and Peace) He did Magnanimously expose Himself, for the rescuing you from the greatest of Evi Popery and Slavery; and delivering you from the Fears you were ready to fir under; and not chearfully concur in doing all things that may be for the Satisfaction and Sasety of your Deliverer, when linked so much with your own I terest?

I believe there are few True Protestants, and Good Country Men, will would not give freely the half of their Estates, for so great a Blessing, were ity to be purchased.

His Desires are confined unto, and regulated by your true Interest.

He demands a Sublidie; but it is only what is necessary for your Safety, the securing of what is dearest to you, and the support of the Government: He has spared no Expence hitherto, for your Protection; and it is but reasonable, should now have your effectual Assistance; let it never be the stand of our Nation, that the best of our Kings was the worst Treated.

He refuseth nothing that can be justly Demanded; His uncontroverte Rightsare only valued by Him, as they are useful for your Good and Security.
