Whitehall Gardens, May 7, 1883.

THE Board of Trade have received through the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs a copy of a Despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Bilbao, enclosing the following translation of the new Regulations respecting the entrance of vessels into that Port, viz.:—

(Translation.)

NEW REGULATION'S issued by the Commandant of Marine concerning the Entrance of Vessels by turn and number.

In future every vessel coming to this port on sighting the semaphore at Galea Point must hoist her number, to which the semaphore will answer with the same number at the top of the mast, and at the yard-arm with another flag, which will indicate the number in turn given to the vessel for crossing the bar, which latter number the vessel shall keep hoisted on her mast, and according to it shall take her corresponding place amongst the others to enter the port. No vessel will be permitted under any circumstances to pass others that have a smaller number than her own; and there shall always be at least a cable's length between a vessel and the one immediately preceding her.

The pilots will comply strictly with these regulations, giving masters of vessels to understand the responsibility they will incur for disobedience; and the pilots will also bear in mind that unless they can prove having been obstructed by captains in carrying out these orders and having protested against such obstruction, retiring from the bridge and reporting the same to the Harbour Master on arrival in port, the entire responsibility, which will be exacted with the utmost rigour by the Captain of the Port, will fall upon them.
