

The Royal Family and others in the Procession were shown to seats as they arrived at the Transept by Mr. E. H. Anson and Captain Phillips, Gentlemen Ushers in Waiting to Her Majesty, where they remained until the conclusion of the Service.

The part of the Service before The Interment having been read, and a Hymn, "Thy Will be Done," sung, The Queen and The Princess Beatrice placed Wreaths upon The Royal Coffin, which was then borne to the Reredos by the men of the Coldstream Guards, and lowered into the Mausoleum as the Service proceeded.

At the conclusion of the Service, the Hymn, "Now the Labourer's task is o'er," was sung, and The Blessing pronounced, after which The Queen was conducted out of the Church, while Chopin's Funeral March was played on the Organ, and returned to Windsor Castle by the same route as on arrival, before two o'clock.

The Royal Family after visiting the Mausoleum followed, and returned to Cambridge Cottage.

The Service was conducted by The Reverend E. Sheppard, the Lesson being read by The Very Reverend The Dean of Windsor, who also pronounced The Blessing. The Musical portion of the Service was sung by the Choir of Kew Church, under the direction of Mr. Breadmore. Mr. Warner presided at the Organ.
