

Captain Bernard Grellier, Royal Army Medical Corps (attached 10th Battalion, Royal Welsh Fusiliers).

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty during operations, when tending the wounded under heavy shell fire. He helped to dig out wounded men who were buried.

Temporary Captain Charles Legård, 7th Battalion, The Lincolnshire Regiment.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty during operations. He directed his men with great skill when reinforcements were needed, and his coolness under heavy shell fire inspired great confidence in the support line. He was early buried by a shell, and later wounded in the neck, but stuck to his command throughout.

Temporary Captain Leonard Douglas Saunders, Royal Army Medical Corps (attached 10th Battalion, The Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire Regiment).

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. He tended the wounded under heavy fire, and finally evacuated them all with great skill and care. His clothing was torn by fragments of shell, and he was at work for forty-eight hours without a rest. This is the third time he has displayed great coolness and devotion to duty.

Temporary Captain Arthur Stephenson, 9th Battalion, The King's Own (Yorkshire Light Infantry).

For conspicuous gallantry. During a heavy bombardment by the enemy a man was wounded and lying in an exposed position on the parapet. Captain Stephenson and a lance-corporal rescued him, and rendered first aid, although they had to move their position three times owing to the trench being blown in.

Captain John Edward Tennant, Scots Guards and Royal Flying Corps.

For conspicuous gallantry and skill. During the night he bombed the sheds of an enemy aerodrome, descending to 30 feet to do so. He shut off his engine in order to avoid giving warning, although there was risk of not being able to start it again. His machine was much damaged by the explosion of his own bombs at so low a height. On his return he requested permission to take another machine and repeat the operation.

Temporary Captain Thomas Thelwall Waddington, 7th Battalion, The Queen's Own (Royal West Kent Regiment).

For conspicuous gallantry. When the enemy exploded a mine, he organised a relief party and, although the proto apparatus was buried, he descended at great personal risk three times in half an hour into a gallery, and rescued three men. At the fourth attempt he collapsed, but was safely brought out.

Temporary Captain Harry Vere White, M.D., Royal Army Medical Corps (attached 7th Battalion, The Lincolnshire Regiment).

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty during operations when tending the wounded. His dressing station was repeatedly hit by shells, and he himself was severely knocked about several times, but for 36 hours he stuck to his work.

Lieutenant Robert Barber, 2nd Battalion, The Suffolk Regiment.

For conspicuous gallantry and skill when leading an attack on the enemy's position. He reached his objective, and held on all day, with a few men, under very heavy shell fire. He was twice buried by shell explosions, but refused to leave his post till relieved. He has previously been noted for good work.

Temporary Lieutenant Herbert Claude Bartlett, 11th Battalion, The Essex Regiment.

For conspicuous gallantry. He charged an enemy patrol close to the enemy's lines, killed one man and wounded others, and, with the help of three men of his party, brought back, under very heavy fire, one man as a prisoner.

Temporary Lieutenant Reginald Peter Nutcombe Brickland Bluett, Royal Army Medical Corps (attached 8th Battalion, The Durham Light Infantry, T.F.).

For conspicuous gallantry. He tended the wounded under heavy shell fire, and was continuously at work for twenty hours. Through his exertions they were removed to a place of safety, although the aid post was unapproachable owing to the enemy's shell fire.

Temporary Lieutenant Percy Alfred Blythe, 18th Battalion (3rd City), The Manchester Regiment.

For conspicuous gallantry. During an enemy bombardment five men were buried in a dug-out by the explosion of a shell. Lieutenant Blythe collected a party, and, working himself with pick and shovel, dug them all out and placed them in safety. During 55 minutes 107 heavy H.E. shells fell close to where he was working.

Temporary Lieutenant Walter Afford Blythe, 12th Siege Battery, Royal Garrison Artillery.

For conspicuous gallantry as Forward Observing Officer. He was repeatedly
