

the fire until ordered to go to the dressing station.

Lt. Edward Samuel Brett, Inf.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. He led his men with great skill in the attack, and established a line of outposts in front of the final objective of the battalion, thereby greatly strengthening the entire position. He completed the consolidation of the position under heavy fire, though he had been wounded.

Lt. Donald Cameron, Inf.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty when in command of his company after the company commander had been killed. He made very skilful dispositions under heavy fire. Although wounded, he held an advanced position in shell-holes, inflicted many casualties on enemy snipers and machine-gunners, and, after five hours' fighting, forced the garrison of a concrete strong point to surrender.

Lt. Hugh Clayton Cameron, Inf.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. After a heavy bombardment the enemy attacked and gained a footing in part of the front line. He at once organised a party, led them from the support position through an intense barrage, and drove out the enemy, inflicting heavy casualties on him during his retirement. He set a splendid example of initiative and courage.

Lt. Lorne Douglas Campbell, Inf.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. When all the other officers of his company had become casualties in an attack, he led the remainder of his company forward, established and consolidated an advanced position under intense fire, and held it until relieved two days later. He showed splendid leadership throughout.

Lt. James Murdoch Christie, Inf.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty during an attack. He made three separate journeys through an intense artillery and machine-gun barrage, bringing back valuable information. He also took part in hard fighting round the enemy strong points, and by his initiative and resource accounted for several of the enemy. His courageous conduct was an inspiration to all, and assisted materially in the success of the operation.

Lt. Shirley Adam Clarke, Inf.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in leading his company in an attack after the company commander had been wounded. With seven other ranks he took up an advanced position in front of a concrete enemy blockhouse, inflicted many casualties with sniping and Lewis-gun fire, and forced the garrison of four officers, sixty other ranks, with five machine guns to surrender.

Rev. Thomas Collins Colwell, Chapln. Serv.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. During the hottest part of the action he moved about over the battlefield succouring the wounded and dressing their wounds. Later, he led search parties night and day, finding the wounded, and did not rest until the last wounded man had been brought in. His courage and energy undoubtedly saved many lives.

Capt. Albert Ernest Horsman Coe, Inf.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. He led his platoon to the objective, and in spite of casualties succeeded in consolidating and holding the position against heavy odds, until he was severely wounded. His cheerfulness and courage were an inspiration to his men under heavy machine-gun and artillery fire, and were the means of holding the platoon together and inflicting heavy losses on the enemy during the attack.

Lt. William Joseph Cowen, Cav.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty as second in command of his squadron, which charged an enemy battery two miles in rear of their line. Though badly wounded he led his men on and brought back six prisoners.

Lt. Charles Douglas Crowe, F.A.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. He rushed forward and dragged away a wounded man who was lying beside some ammunition that was on fire and exploding.

Capt. Henry Clarke Davis, A.M.C.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty as regimental medical officer. He was continually on duty for four days and nights, under heavy fire, attending to the wounded, and frequently dressed cases in the open. His courage and determination were responsible for the evacuation of all the wounded before the battalion was relieved.

Rev. William Henry Davis, Chapl. Serv.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. While the fighting was still in progress he organised and led stretcher parties into the forward area under heavy shell and machine-gun fire. He searched "No-Man's Land" throughout the day in full view of the enemy, and set a splendid example of courage and determination.

Lt. Irvin Harrison Dawson, F.A.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty as forward observation officer during an attack. He established a visual signalling station, and in spite of very heavy shell fire maintained constant communication throughout the day. Though wounded, he refused to leave his post until relieved on the following day.

Lt. Arthur Weymss Deacon, Mtd. Rif.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. Though his right arm was shattered early in the attack, and he was suffering severely, he successfully led an attack on two "pill-boxes," and continued to direct the operations of his company until the position had been consolidated. His example of courage and fortitude contributed largely to the success of the operation.

Lt. William Edward Denley, Inf.

For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. When two of the enemy had been
