Paris, March 9. Several Expresses are come from Calais since the late King James's arrival there, but what they bring is kept Secret, which makes People believe the Court is not pleased with the Accounts they have from thence; and that they have met with some great Disappointment, and therefore is the more reason to think so, seeing they do already alter their Tone, and begin to doubt of the Success of the Intended Invasion, of which they spoke with so much Confidence some days ago. They write from Brest of the 2d Instant, That the Marquis de Nesmond was ready to sail with his Squadron; And from Thouon of the 28th past, That the Fleet lay in that Road under the Command of Monsieur Casteaurenant, and might Sail about the 5th or 6th of this month if the Wind was fair. The 20 French Battalions that were ordered lately to advance towards the Sambre, and the 4 Regiments of Dragoons that were come to Maubeuge are sent back to their Quarters.

Hague, March 13. N. S. The last Letters from Okenal tell us, The French had Ships their Ammunition and Provisions at Calais, but the Soldiers and Horses were not yet Embarked, the appearance of Admiral Ruffel, with the Fleet under his Command, which was seen the 10th Instant from Calais and Graveline, having very much alarmed them and broke their Measures. The English Troops design'd for England lie ready to sail. And Vice Admiral Calenberg stays only for a fair Wind to put to Sea with the Dutch Men of War from the Grece.
