

several stations may serve truly and faithfully to the honour of God and the welfare of His people.

To which address His Majesty was pleased to return the following Gracious Answer:—

The Queen and I thank you for your loyal and dutiful Address.

I am glad to be with you on this memorable occasion, and to express my appreciation of all that has been done to provide this wonderful home for the library of Cambridge University. The vision, faith and enterprise of those who conceived this great idea have been abundantly justified. In the long history of your University there have been many notable gifts, but the traditions of the past have been equalled or excelled by the generosity and public spirit manifested in our own day. The magnificent gift from the International Education Board reminds us not only that there are special ties of friendship and kinship between this country and the United States, but also that education knows no national frontiers. The pursuit of knowledge draws together the peoples of the world in a fellowship of co-operative effort.

To make provision for the growth, preservation and use of your famous collection of books was an object worthy of the generosity of the benefactors who have contributed the necessary means. A library such as this is both a powerhouse and a testing station of educational activities. It inspires and helps the work of specialists in every field of research, and it provides from generation to generation the standards of truth and sound learning by which the fresh products of science and scholarship are tried. It is a workshop of new knowledge and a storehouse of seasoned wisdom.

I congratulate the Architect and all who have shared in constructing and equipping this fine building on their achievement; and I declare this Library open, in the confident hope that it will be a centre of light and guidance for the civilisation of mankind.
