Whitehall, April 21, 1943

The KING has been pleased to award the Edward Medal to William Charles Servis, in recognition of his gallantry in the following circumstances —
On the 26th July, 1942, Mr. Servis, together with Mr. Edward Evans, a steeplejack, and an apprentice, were at work at the top of a chimney in Chatham Dockyard. Evans stood on a staging inside the chimney while the other two men were on the chimney itself engaged in splitting the stonework, when a piece of stone weighing about one cwt dropped on the staging and caused one of the supporting beams to break. Evans was precipitated down inside the chimney to the bottom, about 110 feet below.

Servis thought that there was a possibility that Evans might have fallen on to the accumulated soot at the bottom of the chimney and might still be alive. He descended to the ground and tried to reach Evans through the bottom of the chimney. This, however, proved impossible and, after procuring a boatswain's chair, he returned to the top of the chimney and lowered himself down inside where, with difficulty, he was able to lash Evans to a board attached to a rope. He then pulled himself up and, with assistance, lifted up Evans, placed him in a Neil-Robertson stretcher, and lowered him to the ground. On examination, Evans was found to have been killed by the fall.

The work of rescue took about one hour, and during 35 minutes of this time Servis was inside the chimney where he had to work in the darkness and in a dusty atmosphere. He was exposed to heat and there were also fumes, which leaked past the damper. Servis was aware of the leakage of fumes as sulphur fumes were noticeable at the top of the chimney. He knew the risks, but he promptly faced them in order to rescue his fellow worker, and the careful arrangements he made and the manner in which the rescue was effected showed that he acted with coolness and determination and in no rash and injudicious manner.

Whitehall, May 7, 1943
