- The s.s. "Tantalus" was bombed and sunk at anchor in Manila Bay, the crew being ashore at the time. Apprentice Newsome and two others attempted to get back to Bataan, but found that the bridges had already been blown outside Manila.
- When Japanese troops entered Manila they were interned.
- Apprentice Newsome escaped from the camp on 12th January, 1945, and joined some guerillas. He discovered these to be bandits and left them, but was caught and confined to a hut. Two days later he got away again and joined a large concentration of guerillas at Pila.
- When the American forces arrived at Manila, Newsome, together with a party of guerillas and U.S. paratroops, attacked the camp and succeeded in liberating the prisoners, numbering about 2,100.
- For the next two months until the Americans entered the area in force Newsome commanded the Filipino guerillas.
- Apprentice Newsome displayed outstanding courage and coolness and did much useful work before being repatriated.
