Norman HARRISON, Police Constable, Metropolitan Police. (Croydon, Surrey.)

James Christie McDONALD, Police Constable, Metropolitan Police. (Shirley, Surrey.)

Awarded the British Empire Medal (Civil Division):—

Robert James William JAGGS, Police Constable, Metropolitan Police. (New Addington, Surrey.)

Shortly after nine o'clock on the night of the 2nd November, 1952, two men were seen to climb over the side gate of a warehouse at Tamworth Road, Croydon, and to reach the flat roof of the building about 22 feet above. The alarm was given and Detective Constable Fairfax, Constable Harrison and other Officers, went to the premises in a police van. At about the same time Constable McDonald and another Constable arrived in a police wireless car. Other Police Officers took up various positions around the building. When told that the suspects had climbed up a drainpipe to the roof, Detective Constable Fairfax immediately scaled the drainpipe. Constable McDonald followed him but was unable to negotiate the last six feet and had to return to the ground. Fairfax reached the top and pulled himself on to the roof. In the moonlight he saw the two men about 15 yards away behind a brick stack. He walked towards them, challenged them and then dashed behind the stack, grabbed one of the men and pulled him into the open. The man broke away and his companion then fired at Fairfax and wounded him in the right shoulder. Fairfax fell to the ground but as the two criminals ran past him he got up and closed with one of them and knocked him down. A second shot was then fired at Fairfax but he retained his hold on the man, dragged him behind a skylight and searched him. He found a knuckleduster and a dagger which he removed. Constable McDonald meanwhile had made another effort to climb the drainpipe and had almost reached the top. Fairfax helped him on to the roof and called to the gunman to drop his gun but he refused and made further threats. During this time Constable Harrison had climbed on to a sloping roof nearby and was edging his way along towards the gunman by lying back on the roof with his heels in the guttering. He was seen and a shot was fired at him which struck the roof close to his head. He continued his journey, however, and another shot was fired at him which missed. Harrison then got behind a chimney stack and reached the ground where he joined other Officers who entered the building, ran up to the fire escape exit door on the roof and pushed it open. Fairfax warned them that the man with the gun was nearby but one Constable jumped from the doorway on to the roof. As he did so the gunman fired and the Constable fell to the ground, shot between the eyes. Fairfax immediately left cover to bring in the casualty and a further shot was fired at him. McDonald also came forward and the two Officers dragged the shot Constable
