Whitehall, July 1, 1958.

The following Address was presented to the QUEEN on the occasion of the opening by Her Majesty of Pelham Bridge, Lincoln, on Friday, 27th June 1958:—

Your Majesty:

The citizens of Lincoln are deeply conscious of the honour conferred upon the City by the presence here today of your Majesty and His Royal Highness Prince Philip and it is my privilege to offer you a most warm and loyal welcome on their behalf.

Level Crossings have existed in the City since the coming of the railways to Lincoln in 1846. Many schemes were considered for eliminating these crossings, but either for reasons of finance or the intervention of war, no progress was made.

As soon as the last war ended, however, the City Council returned to the problem and in 1948 approved a scheme for the bridging of the railway at Pelham Street, and here we have the result.

The most modern methods of construction have been adopted; the girders over the railway are supported on special rubber bearings, a unique form of construction in this country. Architecturally it has been designed to conform with the planning of the City centre.

The siting of the bridge in this position was to afford relief to both through and local traffic. Some indication of the extent of this relief can be seen by reference to a census taken in 1956 when in a period of sixteen hours 10,000 vehicles used the level crossing and the gates were closed to road traffic for as much as 33 minutes in the hour.

Steps are being taken to improve the approaches to the Bridge and when these improvements have been completed one of the most serious problems which has faced the City Council will have been solved.

May it now please your Majesty to unveil the tablet commemorating the opening of the Bridge.

To which Address Her Majesty was pleased to return the following gracious answer:—

Thank you, Mr. Alderman, for your kind words of welcome to us.

My husband and I are very pleased to be here in Lincoln today when this major work of improvement to the amenities of this ancient City is inaugurated.

The fame of Lincoln goes back to the time of the Roman occupation. Two of the greatest Roman roads, Fosse Way and Ermine Street, meet here. For many centuries, dominated by its Castle and Cathedral, it has been the hub and centre of the life of the County. A hundred years ago it became an important railway junction, linking the Midlands with the Fens, the East Coast and the Humber.

The concentration of road and rail traffic in an old City has for some time presented you with a very difficult problem. A bold and imaginative solution was demanded if Lincoln was to fulfil in the present day its function as the industrial, cultural and market centre of this part of England, and I warmly congratulate all those who have taken part in the planning and execution of this project. I can imagine the difficulties that faced them in working on an area already occupied by many buildings, and in deciding what must be demolished and what could be left.

In this country, we pride ourselves on our skill in making the changes necessary to satisfy the requirements of modern life without destroying the heritage of the past. This bridge is the latest example of that ingenuity. It does not impair—perhaps it even enhances—the distinction of your City, which has drawn visitors from all parts of world. It will also help to meet the needs of a modern centre of industry. Many who pass over it, both strangers and residents, will be grateful to those who planned and completed this easement to their journeys to the centre of the City. And, as industrial traffic moves more speedily in and out of Lincoln, I hope that this bridge will bring added prosperity to its citizens.

I have great pleasure in declaring the Pelham Bridge open.

I, Alexander Frederick, Earl of Home, one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, in exercise of the power conferred on me by paragraph (1) of Article I of the Federation of Malaya (Appeals to the Privy Council) Order in Council, 1958, hereby fix the 1st day of July, 1958, as the date on which the said Order in Council shall come into force.
