out of Pomerania to this Place, where they will receive further Orders. The Battalion of Naffau-Dillenburg, which lies in the Country of Bareith, is to affemble at Blaffenburg; and the Royal Regiment of Dragoons about Cleves is directed to be in a readinefs to march, and expect Infructions where to join the Imperial Army. There is great Uncertainty in our Accounts from Poland: But they report from Wilda, That the Muscovites in those Parts were forming the Siege or Bychow, to revenge the Affront they had received from the Sieur Seiniki. General Baver had already Orders to attack the Place; and Prince Galliezin marching with many Thousand Muscovites near Polocko and Minsk, was believed to make that Morion with a Design to surprise Seiniki. They add, That his Czarish Majesty went to Lublin on the 20th of the last Month, in order to incline the Council to remove their Session from that Place to Warfaw.

Copenhagen, July 5. The Report which was muliciously spread here of a separate Peace made by the Emperor with France, is utterly vanished. Some Persons who sent that News from Ratishon and Dusseldorp have retracted the Scandal, and acknowledged it groundless. His Majesty is very much recovered; but the Season being far advanced, his intended Progress is laid aside for this Year. Count Rayentlaw, General of the Foot, was dispatched the third Instant with Orders to make the several Reviews. That at Ringssead, where there are 7000 Men, was to be on the fourth and fifth. From thence he is commanded to proceed to the Hland of Fuhnen, and so into Jutland. It is doubted whether he will go into Holstein, his Majesty having but two Regiments, one of Cuirassiers, and another of Dragoons, in that Dutchy, except what lie in Garison. Before the General was commanded on the Review of these Forces, the Emperor's Resident had sollicited his Danish Majesty to send his Quota to the Upper Rhine.

Francfort, July 7. We hear by Letters from the Imperial Army, That on the 30th pass the was resolved in a general Council of War to march towards Philipsbourg, that we might be in a readiness to pass the Rhine as soon as we are join'd by the Troops which are advancing towards us from several Parts. The Enemy had no sooner receiv'd Advice of our Motion, but they immediately resolv'd to follow us, which they did with great Precipitation: They gave out that it was their Delign to attack us; but we have reason to believe that they were assaid of having their Retreat intercepted, and such Detachments cut off as they might have occanent to send to any of their Armies, as well as their Country ravag'd, had they continu'd at so great a distance from their Frontiers. The Marshal de Villars has sent Monieur de Vivans into the Lines between Croon-Weyssenburg and Lauterburg with a Body of Eight Battalions, Three Regiments of Dragoons, and Four of Horse. His Head-Quarters are at Durlach, the rest of the Army being posted at Crezingen, where it is faid they will halt iome Days to observe our Mestions. Our Army is at present encamp'd near Philipsbourg, having the Rhine in our Rear, and a large Morass in our Front, and the only Avenue which leads to us cover'd by the Fortress of Philipsbourg. We are going to lay a Bridge of Boats over the Rhine near Losheim, half a League from Spire. The Palatine Forces shat had join'd the Army are separated from it, and return'd towards Manheim. Abundance of Deserters come over to us daily, who receive Passes for Saxony, with a Design to enter themselves into the Service of the King of Sweden. We hear that the Troops of Saxony and Lunenburg are marching with all expedition to reinforce us, and that the Elector of Hanever has accepted the Command of the Imperial Army; so that the Enemy, who so lately threaten'd to o to their Frontiers, to prevent the Invalion of their own Country. From the Camp at Meldert, July 7. His Grace the Duke of Marlborough, upon intelligence that the Enemy had formed a Delign to fire the Magazine at Bruflels, has fent two Batfalions more to reinforce that Gavilon. Reports from the Enemy's Camp give us reafon to hope they have received Advice, That the Duke of Sarby and Prince Eugene have already penerrated into Dauphia. From the Camp at Meldert, July 11. Our Camp is so well fupply d with all fort of Necestaries, that we have no Apprehenions of being oblight to alrea our Satuation, but as it may be thought advantagious to the Service. The Enemy continue at Gembloitrs; and having detected only Three Barralions and Five Squadrons to Germany, he without any fearing Intention to decamp. Intention to decamp.
