

of Marlborough received Advice at the Camp at Genap, That the Enemy, who continued their March all the Day before, and after a little Halt had marched again about midnight, were come to the Camp of Seneffe: His Grace thereupon resolved to march the same Day to Nivellic, in order to attack them if they continued in their Camp; but it was so late before our Army came to the Ground, that all things could not be disposed for Battle before the next Day; in order to which a Detachment of 40 Squadrons and 5000 Grenadiers, under the Command of Count Tilly, were ordered that Evening to post themselves as near as they could to the Enemy, to observe their Motions, and in case they marched to fall on their Rear; but they took their opportunity as soon as it grew dark, and marched off in Five Columns, without Beat of Drum or Sound of Trumpet: Count Tilly perceiving at break of Day they were march'd, immediately followed them, and a little beyond Seneffe came up with the Rear Guard, consisting of 8 Battalions, besides the Picket of their whole Foot, and 12 Squadrons, which he charged, and pushed as far as the Plains of Marimont; but the Enemy having the Advantage of sending their Artillery and Baggage over the Sambre, marched with so much Expedition to avoid coming to a Battle, and the Ways to them were so deep, by reason of the late Rains, that it was impossible to stop their Retreat: Whereupon Count Tilly returned back, at the same time that Count Lottum was advancing with 20 Battalions and 30 Squadrons to sustain him; and the whole Army was ready to follow, in case the Enemy could have been brought to an Engagement; but they continued their March with such Hast, that they made only a small Halt before they came to the Camp of Cambron, where they arrived yesterday; and our Army came at the same time from Nivellic to this Camp, having their Right at Cauchie les Dames, and the Left at Naast. In the Skirmishes between our Detachment and the Enemy's Rear-Guard, we had a Captain of Horse and another of Dragoons killed, and about 10 private Men killed and wounded. We have yet no certain Account of the Enemy's Loss; but they have suffered very much in this Retreat, a great Number of Deserters being come over to us, besides what are gone to the Towns. Their Army had not Bread, nor time to pitch their Tents, for two Days.

From the Camp at Soignies, August 18. The great Rains which have fallen for several Days having made the Ways altogether unpassable, have obliged us to give over the Pursuit of the Enemy, and confined us to this Camp: In the mean time the Enemy are fortifying the Avenues of theirs in the best manner the Weather will permit. The Deserters come over to us confirm how much they have suffered in their March for want of Bread. This Day the Guard which conducted our Bread-Wagons from Brussels, brought in a Party of the Enemy, consisting of 25 Men, which they took in a Village not far from the Camp.

Admiralty-Office, Aug. 13. The following Account hath been received from a very good Hand relating to the Ships bound to Russia, which lately fell into the Enemy's Hands on the Coast of Lapland: Admiral Whetstone convoy'd the Russia Fleet between the Islands of Sotland, and kept them company until they were out of sight of the said Islands, when he left them: And two Days after the Commander in Chief of the Russia Convoy, Captain Haddock, made a Signal, by hoisting and lowering his Colours 11 times one after another, which the Masters of the Russia Ships did own they took was to acquaint them that there were 11 Sail in sight; but they (namely the Masters of the Ships which were taken) hearing no more of them for two Days after, and being within 100 Leagues of Archangel, did trust to their sailing, and made the best of their way; and some time after they fell into the Enemy's Hands, they saw the three English Ships of War, with the rest of the Fleet, lying by in order to engage the Enemy's Squadron; in the interim whereof the Russia Ships made the best of their Way towards Archangel; but their own Ships finding those of the Enemy declined to give them Battle, did soon make after the Merchant Ships, in order to conduct them in safety to their Port.
