Turin, August 23. N. S.

THEIR Royal Highnesses continue to take the benefit of the Country Air, for the perfect Re-establishment of their Health. On the 18th of this Month they lay at Count Mazin's Castle, and returned the next Day to St. George, where they are to continue for some time, finding much Relief from the Air of that Place. The King of Spain's Adjutant, who brought hither an Account of the Victory obtained by his Catholick Majesty's Arms on the 27th of the last Month, returned yesterday towards Catalonia. His Royal Highness's Cavalry continues still at Cavour, only one Regiment of Dragoons is encamped at Pro-falco; that of the Emperor is at present at Vigon, where Vaubonne's Regiment of Dragoons is likewise arrived, but Vitconti's Imperial Regiment is at Tirca. Letters from the Army advise, that on the 10th, 11th and 12th Instant the Troops were busied in relieving the several Posts; and forasmuch as the Enemy was found to be too advantageously situated to be attacked in their Camp; that Forage and Provisions was grown scarce; and that the Snow and Cold Weather began to be very troublesome in those naked Mountains, Marshal Thauu resolved to send a strong Detachment to Baron Rhebinder at Oulx, to enable him to penetrate into the Enemy's Country at some other Place. That Detachment, consisting of ten Battallions, under the Command of the Marquis d'Andorno, marched accordingly on the 12th. The Army, the better to favour and cover this Movement, continued in their Camp at Fogliosa that Day and the next. The 14th they marched in sight of the Enemy, and advanced towards the Vally of Sturz, having first blown up the Forts of Arche and Castelet. The Baron de Schulembourg joined the Army in their March with his own Troops, and some other Detachments. They encamped that Night at Argentiere, the 15th at Simbuc, and the 16th at Demont, where they continued the 17th, Count Thauu's Quarters being at Caraglio. During their stay there the Marquis d'Andorno sent Word that he arrived at Abriez on the 14th, with the ten Battallions under his Command, and that he had been to view the Enemy's Posts on the side of Molires. The 18th the Army marched towards Caraglio, where it arrived the same Day. On the 19th, early in the Morning, they continued their March, and arrived in the Afternoon at Castiglione, where they were informed that the Marquis d' Andorno had joined the Baron de Rhebinder on the 17th at Oulx. The 20th the Army encamp'd at Carda on the Po, from whence it continued its March by P gene-rol towards Fenestrelles, in order to try if any thing might be undertaken on that side. General Thauu marched before the Army with a Detachment towards Susa, that he might be the better able to dispose every thing for the Execution of his Designs. Letters from the Frontiers advise, that the Duke of Berwick being informed of the new Movements our Army had made, had detached ten Battallions for a Reinforcement of the Troops that guarded the Heights of Briaccon, and the Pass of Valoire, and had likewise made another Detachment into the Vally of Queiras, to join the Troops, that were posted in the Plains; and that having sent ten Battallions towards the Vally of Barcelonetta, for the Security of Provence on that side, he continued near Tournes and Guillestre. Our last Letters from Catalonia tell us, that several Places in Arragon had surrendered to his Catholick Majesty, and that the Duke of Anjou was preparing to pass the Cinca at Fraga, in order to cover the rest of that Province.
