

persu'd by the Enemy, who meeting with our Baggage, which lay in the Rear of our second Line, they left the Pursuit, and fell to Plunder. Whilst this was doing, the second Line of Horse in their Right had taken our Left Wing of Foot in Flank, Front and Rear, and after a very hot Dispute had almost cut off eight Battalions; after which, thinking themselves every way Victorious, they also fell into the Pillage; which Marshal Staremberg soon perceived, and made an Advantage of it, for he instantly form'd the Foot of his Right into hollow Squares, and posting his Cavalry on their Flanks, he charg'd their whole Body of Foot so vigorously, that he entirely routed them, and our Men pursu'd them for above half a League of Ground together. The Success the Enemy had in the beginning had so exasperated our Soldiers, that they did not trouble themselves to make many Prisoners. However, some General Officers were taken, who declar'd, that they had made three Breaches in the Walls of Brihuega, and attack'd General Stanhope five several times at each Breach, and were as often repulsed with great Slaughter; but renewing the Attack the 9th at Sunset, they then obliged him and the Troops under his Command to surrender Prisoners of War, which they had not done even then, had they not spent all their Ammunition. Marshal Staremberg pursu'd his Victory 'till more than an Hour after it was dark, and lay beyond the Field of Battel 'till eight the next Morning, at which time he found the Enemy had retir'd in great Confusion by the favour of the Night, and that such of our Baggage, and Artillery Mules, as their Horse had not been able to destroy or carry off, the Peasants of the Country had done for them; whereupon he was obliged to burn all the Carriages, and Nail up both our own Cannon and those we had taken from the Enemy; after which he pursu'd his March, without any Interruption, towards the Frontiers of Arragon. The Enemy lost above six thousand Men in the Action; our Loss does not amount to half the Number. Lieutenant-General Belcastel is among the Slain, and is universally Lamented. Marshal Staremberg sent three Trumpets one after another to get Information of the Prisoners taken by the Enemy, who were so far from returning an Answer to the Marshal, that they would not so much as permit the Trumpets to come back; so that when Captain Cosby came away, no particular Account could be had of them.
