Berlin, Dec. 26. Two Posts of the 16th and 19th are just arrived from Warsaw; the first gave great Hopes that all would be finished the next Day, the Confederates, in Consideration of what they hourly suffered under the Saxons and Muscovites, and of the Divisions amongst themselves, complying with whatever almost was proposed by the Court both in the Establishment and Payment of the Army; and the chief Points being actually drawn up into the Form of a Constitution, ready to be passed in one or two Sessions: But those of the 19th talk again very doubtfully of the Success. Prince Wicnowieski and the Palatin of Lublin had been deputed by the Confederates to the Grand Generals of Poland and Lithuania, to desire they would take the Oaths prescribed to them by the Treaty of Accommodation, and immediately re-assume their former Command of the Armies; but they have positively refused the said Oath, before it is moderated in several Points, particularly as to their Right of being present and voting at the Election of their Kings, which every private Nobleman has, as to their holding their own Courts of Justice, and as to their Prerogative of disposing freely all Military Charges. Some were apt to fear this might give Occasion to new Disturbances, several of the Poles, particularly the Starost of Bobruiski Sapieha, aiming at a Re-confederacy: The Marshals of the Confederacy delayed their coming on this Side of the Vistula from Time to Time.
