

Helm a-lee to stay, but the Captain called to keep fast the Fore-Sheet; at the same Time the Ship struck upon a sunk Rock, which is not above Pistol-shot from the Land of the Lizard, some sunk Rocks lying half a Mile or more without them. The Ship bulged, and in about a Quarter of an Hour or more broke to Pieces, the Larboard Side falling away first, and many Men with it: He kept to the Starboard Side, which soon broke to Pieces, and drove over the sunk Rock; he seeing a Rock near him above Water, left the Wreck, and swam to it, and got upon it, where he found William James. A Boat fetched him from this Rock in the Afternoon about Three a-Clock Friday the 10th, which Boat came to fish for what they could get.

William James says as the other, That they sailed from Plymouth Sound on Tuesday after Night; that they lay by on Thursday Night, in order to bear up for Plymouth. About Three a Clock in the Morning he was waked with a great Noise, being then asleep between Decks, and when he came upon Deck, he saw the Land under the Lee; the Ship being then brought to, to the Southward; and he heard the Men call from the Forecable, that there were Breakers a-Head; the Helm was put a-Lee, but presently after the Captain called to keep fast the Fore-Sheet; but the Ship immediately struck, and soon after the Larboard Side broke away, but he got up upon the Starboard Quarter, which in a little time broke also to Pieces, and fell into the Water, and then he swam to the dry Rock, which was not above three or four Yards from him; but says, as Goodall also did, that they had great Difficulty, by reason of the Surf of the Sea, to get upon it; and says that Rock is not above Musket-shot from the main Land.

Robert Wilson was asleep in his Hammock when they called to clear the Cables, and he presently cut down his Hammock, being in the way of the Cables. When the Ship struck, he ran up upon Deck, and got upon the Starboard Quarter, but was washed from thence, and got hold of the Stump of the Mizzen-Mast, till it unstept, and then stuck to part of the Larboard Quarter: Upon which were also three Men more, viz. Edward Wail, Quarter-Master, Alexander Thompson, and Richard Tiller; These four drove away with the Tide of Flood to the Eastward, upon the said Piece of Wreck, about three Hours; and then being near the Shore, Wilson left the Wreck, and swam to the Shore, where he got up upon the Rocks with Difficulty; the Piece of Wreck, with the other three Men, drove into a little Cove just by him; the other Men called to him, to ask if he could help them, but he could not, it being dark; but near Day-light, he supposes the Sea dashed the Wreck against the Rocks, and so those three Men perished.
