Which Addresses His Majesty was pleased to receive very graciously.

Paris, June 3, N. S. The following Extract of the Advices received by the Court relating to the Plague, has been communicated to the foreign Ministers.

Provence. The Marquess de Brancas in his Letter of the 20th of May gives an Account, that on the 19th he was at the Barrier of Marseilles, and had made proper Regulations there for receiving all necessary Provisions and Goods: The 18th and 19th five Persons fell sick: Every Day as exact Orders were observed, so if a violent Relapse was expected; in the mean while the Physicians were of Opinion the Distemper would not make any great Progress. The 20th none taken ill, those who sickened the two preceeding Days had been carried to the Infirmarys. M. de Grand Mailon who commands in Fort St. John at Marseilles, writes the 21st of May, that from six to nine Persons a Day fell ill in the City; and as they are immediately carried to the Infirmarys, and every one who had had Communication with them was put under Quarantain, in all likelihood the Distemper would not have very bad Consequences. The Barriers were re-established, and the Citadel and Forts stored with Provisions. M. le Bret in his of the 20th and 22d of May relates, that of four Persons who died at Marseilles the 7th, one had lain ill several Days, and that going to the Top of the Stairs to call somebody, he fell down and broke his Skull. On the 13th two died in the Hospital of la Charité, and six sick were carried thither. On the 20th five died and seven fell sick. The 21st was a more favourable Day; he reckoned that among the forementioned sick several had not the Plague.

The Combat, and the Principality of Orange. M. Herault a Surgeon in his Letter of the 20th of May, writes, that the Distemper was pretty violent in Orange, that on the 16th four died and six fell sick; but since, there had been but three dead and two sick. The Symptoms were so malignant, that it was feared the Distemper would rage with great Violence; for some of the sick had 15 or 20 Tumours or Sores upon them, and when they died their Bodies had Black or Purple Spots. M. de Launay writes the 20th, that the Distemper had not increased at Orange or in its Territory, nor at Bedarides; but that it had not decreased at Avignon. M. d'Orfay in his of the 24th of May advises, that since the Relapse at Orange there had died in the Town and its Territory to the 16th of May 86 Persons, and 25 at Bedarides: Avignon continued in a very bad State. The Marquess de Chabrilan in his of the 26th of May says, Avignon has still some sick though the Number be not great, and but few die. The 16th the sick in the Infirmarys of Orange were in a Way of Recovery.

The Gevaudan. The Governour of Alais writes the 22d of May, that the 18th none died or fell sick there, and it was the Opinion of Physicians that there was no likelihood of the Return of the Plague there. A Woman who had broken the Rules of Quarantain, had been exposed in the Pillory. The Duke de Roquelaine in his of the 22d of May confirms the News from Alais; no more than two sick remained in the Infirmary, and they were like to do well; whence he judged the Distemper was ceasing; however he had given strict Orders and recommended Vigilance still. M. de Rothe writes the 21st of May, that a Soldier and his Wife who had fallen sick at Mende were dead in the Infirmarys. There were then none sick in the Gevaudan, the Vivarets and the Cevennes. M. de Bernage writes the 25th of May, that throughout the Gevaudan, the Cevennes, and the Vivaretz there were but two sick at Alais, and since the 15th none had newly been taken ill, which made it hoped the Distemper would soon cease.
