Indies, and the Mediterranean Seas, in order to avert the imminent Danger hanging over our Heads? And we cannot but with Pleafure observe, that all this hath been done by Expences circulating at Home, fince the Fleet is repaired with our own Workmen, fupplied with our own Provisions, and mann'd with our own Seamen. We are also fensible, and all good Subjects must concur with us thereas . in, that all those who shall shew their Love to their Country by Unanimity in fuch a critical Conjuncture of Affairs as this is, will take the best and most effectual Means to eftablish the true and lasting Interest of themfelves and their Posterity.

We cannot therefore conclude this our humble Address without our Prayers to Almighty God to unite the Hearts and Hands of all your Subjects, in order to enable your Majesty to carry on the necessary Defence of Great Britain with Vigour and Success, against all its powerful Enemies, and thereby to preferve the happy Conftitution of this Government both in Church and State, which is fuch as has been ever the Glory of this Nation, and the Envy of all others; and which your Majesty, with the Concurrence of your great Counsel in Parliament allembled, may yet in due Time make more Glorious, by eftablishing fuch an inexhauitible Fund on that Foundation, as will be sufficient to pay off the publick Debts in a reafonable Time, with Honour to your Majesty, and with Advantage to every private Subject. May your Majelty long reign over us with Succefs againft all your Enemies; may your great Counfel in Parliament allembled, as well as the Minifery you thall employ at well as the Ministry you shall employ, al-ways act with that Unanimity and Steadinels for the Good of your Majesty and your People, as they now do; and may this Kingdom of Great Britain never want a Protestant Heir of your illustrious Family to imitate your glorious Example in your just and mild Administration at Home, and in preferving the Balance of Europe Abroad, and confequently reign (like your Majesty) in the Hearts of all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and of all the Commonalty of this Kingdom.
