Pool, Nov. 29.

There is no appearance of an Enemy on these Coasts, so that our Fisher-men follow their employment without the least apprehension. Here runs a report, that a Dutch man of War of 36 Guns, having lost his Masts, was forced into the Severn.

Plymouth, Nov. 29. Two days since came in two ships from the Sireights; one from Genoa, laden with Oyls; the other from Zant, laden with Currants, both bound for London.

Isle of Wight, Nov. 29. A Privateer brought in a French-man laden with Wines, who doth half confess he was bound for Holland.

Dover, Decemb. 1. The sickness is so much abated this last week, that we hope our next will give an account, that we are clear of the Infection. One thing omitted in the relation of the late storm, is not unworthy knowledge; That a prize of Sir Arthur Slingsbies, brought in hither, was so beaten by the Waves, that the Master and three of her men were washed over board by one Sea, and another threw them into their ship again, with a dead man in their company; after which, a third Sea carried away the dead man, and left them hanging by the Ropes: She was taken with six foot water in her Hold, and is now in this Harbor.

Coventry, Nov. 27. Merryden is (as is hoped) quite clear from Infection, none having died there for several weeks past, and not above fourteen or fifteen in all of the Plague; nor hath any one died at Daventry lately, where the total of that Mortality was twenty six, no other place near us having been visited.

Rome, Nov. 24. His Holiness returned from the Countrey Tuesday last, and Wednesday morning gave Audience to the Spanish Ambassador, who was accompanied with 200 Coaches in a mournful posture, as that sad occasion required: After Dinner he went to return his visit to Cardinal Francisco Barberini, is chief of the Colledge of Cardinals; and thence to the Queen of Sweden, and to the rest of the Cardinals. His Holiness seems now to have perfectly recovered his health. This week died the Duke de Cesarini, a Prince of an ancient Roman Family, and Hereditary Grand Gonfalonier (or Standard-bearer) of the Senate and people of Rome, an Honor conferred long since on his Predecessors, for their eminent services to this See.

Dantzick, Nov. 21. The Agreement (as my last advised) is now made with Lubomirski: The conditions these,

1. That the Confederates with their Marschal, and those that joyned with Lubomirski, shall continue in the same condition till the Dyet, for which they have His Majesties promise, and the Publick Faith.
2. That the Confederates, upon the obtaining an Act of Oblivion from the Dyet, and six months pay shall be obliged to disband.
3. That in the mean time the Confederates shall have Winter Quarters assigned them by their General, but without any oppression to the subject.
4. That such injuries and violences as shall be committed by them, either in their Camp or in their Winter Quarters, shall not be included in the intended Act of Oblivion.
5. That His Majesty shall grant free leave to Lubomirski, to make his Application to any of the particular Provincial Dyets, or to the General Dyet, for his restitution according to the Declaration that was presented to him by the Bishops.
6. That His Majesty doth oblige himself by promise to call the Dyet in the usual place, as formerly.

His Majesty having accepted of this Agreement with Lubomirski on the Tenth, returned the next day to Thorn, and brought with him the Regiment of His Life-guard, who had no sooner entred the Town, but they took the Command of the Guards, and dismissed the Burgers, at which the Town seemed somewhat discontented. On the twelfth, the Senate offered to His Majesty the Burgers for Guard, and received an answer, That he would not give them that trouble. The thirteenth, they presented him with two thousand Ducats, and a second tender of their service; to which his Majesty replied, That he kept a Garrison there, fearing they were not strong enough: Upon which, when they said there was now no farther danger, his Majesty having accepted of Lubomirski; he farther, not without some indignation, told them, That it was as yet but a Cessation, and that in case of the worst, he must have a place of Refuge for his Queen. His Majesty hath now all the Garrison in Prussia Royal, except this Town, who are somewhat startled at this passage at Thorn. The fourteenth, the King went from thence toward Warsaw, and its not doubted a Dyet will be suddenly called to meet in February next, till when, we shall not know the issue of this Cessation.

Vienna, Nov. 17. His Imperial Majesty, with the Polsish, Portugal, and Muscovy Ambassadors, is expected here in eighteen days. Yesterday arrived a Chianx from the Vizier of Offens, with a complaint to the President of the Council (the Baron of Schwarzenbourg) against the Hungarians for several violences they had committed upon them, the consideration which was deferred till the return of the Court. The Presents sent to the Grand Seignior, are not so well received as they were intended, he looking upon them rather as a Tribute than Gift, which causes a jealousy here what his intention may be towards us. The Emperor, with his whole Retinue in their passage through Saltburgh, were entertained charge of the Countrey. All General and Commissioned, are commanded to repair to Vienna before the latter end this month, where order will be taken as well for the recruiting the old Regiments, as issuing out Commissions for raising of new. Some Passengers from Offens mention a new and dangerous conspiracy in Asia, and that the soldiery is much dissatisfied with their Vizier there.

Stockholm, Nov. 14. The Ambassador from Russia is returning home, by reason of his sickness. The Count Ksningmark is preparing for France, and will depart with the first. A French ship was cast away before the Land, with all the passengers and goods.

Wismar, Novemb. 16. The Field Marshal the Count of Donaw arrived here the nineteenth instant with 600 Foot, and store of Ammunition, but whether he intends from hence, is not yet known.

Hague, Decemb. 4. The Troops of the Bishop of Munster at Winschoren and Neylegerlee, have joyned with those at Terapple, maugre all opposition, having fired a fair Village near it, called Blyjan, and several other good houses, and are now at Wedde, Ulagwedde, and Apple, and remain in possession of the strong Fort situated near Winschoren. Several of the French Succors have past over the Issel. The States are shrewdly startled at the progress of the enemies forces to whom they would gladly give a diversion, by making an inroad into Westphalia, but this is thought will draw them off so many fresh enemies, who will finde themselves concerned when any part of the Empire shall be attacked, that they will not judge it adviseable to proceed that way. In the mean time the States have sent to the States of Munster, to desire them to dispose the Prince, to a Restitution of such places as he hath taken, or else that they must be forced to seek their own satisfaction by Arms.

Paris, Decemb. 5. The Dutch, who were never very fond of our succors of men, but rather wished it might have been in money, would fain press the King to pay them the money a
