

morning the Prince of Orange received a Letter from Monsieur Fario, Governor of Maeſtricht, in which he gives his Highneſs an account of ſeveral Sallies he has of late made upon the Enemy, though without doing any conſiderable execution, and concludes this Letter with a promiſe to his Highneſs, that he will defend the place, as became a good and faithful Soldier. The Duke of Bournoville writes, as is ſaid, from Vienna, That he had Orders to march with the Imperial Army, which, as the Imperial Miniſters here aſſure us, ſhall conſiſt of 30000 Men. We talk here much of a Treaty of Alliance being concluded between this State and the Crown of Denmark. I know you will be curious to know what we ſay of the laſt Engagement, I therefore ſend you this following Copy of what is publiſhed here.

On Friday laſt, after the departure of the Poſt, by Letters, as well from Lieutenant-Admiral de Ruyter, as others, we had advice of the ſecond Engagement the 14 inſtant. That the 12, the Lieutenant Admiral de Ruyter held a Council of War on board his Ship, where it was conſulted, our Ships being now reſited again, how they ſhould farther act, and finding that they were as ſtrong as they could expect to be, and that the Enemy might with the next westerly Wind receive a reinforcement from home, it was reſolved, That in caſe no Orders came to the contrary, they ſhould engage the Enemy the fourteenth; That morning the States Deputies, the Heer Bosvelt, the Heer Vander Meyden, the Heer Maregnault, and the Heer Vander Viſſen, came on board the Lieutenant Admiral de Ruyter, and having approved of the ſaid reſolution, and had ſome farther debate together, went aſhoar again; immediately after which, they weighed Anchor, and having put our Fleet in order, ſailed to the Enemy, who were likewiſe got under ſail; About 4 in the afternoon the Fight began, and ſo continued till the night parted them, when we Tacked and ſtood again for our Coaſt, and the next day arrived again in Schonevelt; The Engliſh have loſt ſix Men of War, as well burnt as ſunk; we have not loſt one, and all our Head-Commanders are well, ſo that we have again obtained a conſiderable victory; the farther particulars we have not as yet had time to learn.

Vice-Admiral de Liefde writes that his Ship is very much torn, and that he wants 125 Men of his Roll, which he deſires may be forthwith ſupplied him, for till then his Ship is unſerviceable; and that he had a ſlight wound in the Head by a Splinter. The 15 the States Deputies came on board again.

I do not doubt but you are ſo well acquainted with the Stile of theſe People, that you will not wonder they have the confidence to ſpeak of a victory, and of the Engliſh having loſt ſix Men of War, which is ſo notoriously falſe.

Amſterdam, June 20. We have not as yet any particular Account of the Engagement on Wednesday the 14 inſtant, but in general they tell us, that we have obtained an other Victory, though hitherto we ſee no great ſigns of it; certain it is, that many of our Capital Ships are diſabled, and abundance of Men killed and wounded; divers of the moſt conſiderable Ships have loſt a fourth part, and ſome a third of their Men, beſides thoſe wounded; Captain Braekell having in his Ship alone, had 130 Men killed outright; what other loſs we have had, we are kept ignorant of, though ſome of the wounded Men that are come aſhoar ſay, that we have loſt three Men of War, two of North-Holland; and one of Zealand, but this is not certain; Our Fleet lies at preſent at Schonevelt, where they are reſitting themſelves, which we uſe all poſſible endeavors to do forthwith. We do not yet know of one Officer killed, which ſufficiently argues, that they conceal from us who are ſlain, for certainly ſome are. The French continue to ply Muyden hard, and will it is thought, at laſt make themſelves Maſters of the Place. The Countrey hereabouts lies all ſounder water, that the French at Utrecht have not as yet been able to attempt any thing upon us.

From the Camp before Maeſtricht, June 20.

On Saturday laſt it was reſolved to open the Trenches, which was accordingly done, and about ſeven a Clock in the Evening, part of the Army Marched in two Bodies towards the Town, the Horſe carrying Fagots, and the Foot Shovels and Axes, they advanced within Muſket ſhot of the Walls, the Enemy all the while firing upon us with great and ſmall ſhot, but not with that violence as was expected, ſo that very few of our Men were killed or wounded; the night was very favourable to us; for there fell a great deal of Rain about that time, and it was very dark; it was expected the Enemy would have made a Sally, but they did not, ſo that the next Morning by break of day, we had without any oppoſition finiſhed three Batteries, and had 26 great Guns planted on them, which have played inceſſantly ever ſince, and by 11 a Clock we had diſmounted all the Guns of the Town we could come to bear upon, excepting one or two the fartheſt diſtant from our Battery; They made all that while but a faint Fire from the Town, except that their Muſqueteers have ſhot pretty thick from their Palifadoes, but without doing any conſiderable hurt to our Men; In the mean time our Trenches advance continually.

From the Camp before Maeſtricht, June 21.

Since we broke ground, we have advanced extremely, with the loſs of very few Men, the Enemy ſcarce Shooting from the place, of which we cannot imagine the reaſon; Our Trenches are now within 30 Yards of the Counterſcarp; the night paſt, which was the fourth night ſince the opening of them, the Duke of Stamouſh (whoſe turn it was) Commanded in the Trenches, and the Service was very hot, the Enemy firing upon us more furiously than they had ever done before; our buſineſs now is to lodge our ſelves on the Counterſcarp, which we do not doubt but we ſhall do, being ſo near it as we are; We have three great Batteries, within leſs than Muſket ſhot of their Walls, from whence we are continually playing upon them; we have diſmounted all their Guns which our Cannon could bear upon, except two or three.

Whitehall, June 14. Yeſterday Morning His Maſtey and his Royal Highneſs returned from the Fleet, and this Morning his Highneſs Prince Rupert came up from thence, with intentions to return again in a day or two.
