Berlin, January 14.

According to Letters from Breslau of the 7th, his Prussian Majesty had left that Place to go towards Olau and Klein-Olse, from whence Orders were to be given to block up Brieg, as has been done with Glogow, and the Remainder of the Army was to march to the River Neifs, where 'twas said they are to quarter themselves, and wait till the Season and Weather will permit them to go upon new Enterprizes.

Berlin, Jan. 17. Since the Advices of his Prussian Majesty's having left Breslau, Accounts are come of his having arrived at Olau; that Felt-Marshal Schwerin was got to Ottmachaw; and that the Prussian Troops had taken Possession of both these Places, and made the Garrisons Prisoners.

Berlin, Jan. 21. A Confirmation is arrived here of the taking of Ottmachaw by the Prussians: It is a small Castle situate near the River Neifs. The Garrison, consisting of five incompleat Companies of Grenadiers, in all about 250 Men, were made Prisoners after a Resistance of 24 Hours. In this Affair the Prussians had a Major of Engineers and 12 private Men killed, according to some Letters; but others make the Loss amount to 50 Men. There has likewise been a Skirmish between the Prussian Hussars and Prince Lichtenstein's Regiment of Dragoons near Ottmachaw, in which the former were drawn into an Ambuscade; the Lieutenant who commanded them, and several Hussars, were cut to Pieces. After the Action, the Austrian Dragoons seeing a superior Body were advancing towards them, retired to the other Side of the Neifs. At Olau there were 150 Men, but they surrendered the Place on Condition that they should be conducted to Brieg, which was done accordingly. When Felt-Marshal Schwerin summoned Ottmachaw to surrender, his Aid de Camp, who was charged with that Commission, having advanced too near the Place before he beat a Parley, the Garrison fired upon him and killed his Drummer, the Aide de Camp himself having a narrow Escape, his Horse having been shot under him. On Thursday last Orders came to Major General Count Troughes's Regiment, quartered in this Town, to march forthwith towards Silesia, and accordingly they are to set out To-morrow. It is supposed other Regiments have received the like Orders; all Advices agreeing, that the Body of Austrian Troops on the other Side the River Neifs grows daily more considerable by the Arrival of Regiments from Hungary, Moravia, and Bohemia.
