Stockholm, Dec. 7, O. S. On the 1st of this Month the Funeral Obsequies of the late Queen of Sweden were performed here with the greatest Pomp and Magnificence. On the 30th of November the Notification of the Funeral was published to the People with the Sound of Drums and Trumpets, and declared to the four Estates of the Kingdom, then sitting, by two Gentlemen of the King's Bed-Chamber, who thereupon chose Fifty out of the Nobles, and Twenty four from each of the other three Estates, to attend his Majesty in the Procession. The same Evening the Grand Marshal of the King's Household, attended with the Senators, repair'd to the Church of Ridder Holm, and took her Majesty's Coffin out of the Royal Vault where it had been deposited ever since her Majesty's Death, and placed it under a magnificent Mausoleum, erected for that Purpose, the whole Church itself being covered with black Cloth, and adorned with emblematical Figures and Images suitable to the Occasion. Immediately thereupon a Corporal with 24 Drabans, two Gentlemen of the King's Bed-Chamber, and a Captain of the King's Guard, were appointed to watch over her Majesty's Coffin during the Night. The next Morning, being the Day of the Funeral, all the Regiments in the Town took Possession of the chief Posts there and in the Suburbs, and particularly of the Avenues leading to the Church. In the mean Time the Regalia were carried to the Church by Six of the King's Chamberlains, and deliver'd to the Marshal of the King's Household, who laid them upon a Table cover'd with black Velvet at the Right-hand of her Majesty. Immediately the Lieutenant Colonel of the King's Drabans, and the Lieutenant Colonel of the King's Guards, plac'd themselves at the Sides of the Mausoleum. And the Feldt Marshal Hamilton, the Governor of the City, and six Presidents, ranged themselves under the Canopy; on the left Side of whom stood the Senator Adlerfeldt, bearing the King's Banner. At Two o'Clock the Bells in all the Churches began Tolling. At Three o'Clock the Procession commended in the Manner following: First, the King's Pages, preceded by one of their Governours. Next, the Marshal of the Household, with his Staff covered with Crape, having two Heralds before him dressed in long black Cloaks. Then the Gentlemen of the Court, the chief Officers of the Army and Extra Capita, the Deputies, from Pomerania and Wismar, and his Majesty's Hessian Officers. Next to them, and immediately before the King's Person, the Grand Marshal with his Staff covered. His Majesty next, guarded on each Side by 24 Drabans, and surrounded by the Chief Officers of his Army, the Master of the Horse, and the Keeper of the Game, having his Train supported by three Lords of the Bed Chamber.
