Turin, April 17, N. S.

BY the last Accounts we had from Prince Lobcowitz we hear, that he has fixed his Camp at Foss Alta on this Side the Panaro. By this Position, by Nature very strong and favourable, he covers Modena, the Mirandola, as well as his Communication with the Po and Mantua, from whence by Degrees some Recruits begin to join his Army; and his Situation at present is such, that it is very much questioned whether M. de Gages will dare, or is strong enough to attack him. The three Battalions, which the King of Sardinia sent from Piedmont, are got safe into Modena; and at the Austrian General's Request, a Regiment of Horse quarter'd at Placentia was immediately ordered to march to his Army, and is supposed to have joined it Yesterday Evening. It is hoped that this Reinforcement, together with the Regiments of Pallavicini and Clerici and Warasdiners that were in Lombardy, and about 2000 Recruits from Germany already arrived at Prince Lobcowitz's Camp, will enable him to make a Stand, and to maintain the advantageous Post he has fixed upon. M. de Gages has not as yet any of his large Artillery, and consequently cannot attempt to besiege any of the Places. As far as we can judge of his Plan since his passing the Panaro towards the Fountain Head at Spillimberto on the 14th Instant, he will probably march as soon as his Cavalry from Savoy, which is to be at the Var on the 20th, is once entred into the County of Nice. It is said that last Night Orders were issued and sent to above twenty Battalions of the Sardinian Troops to march to the Posts assigned them towards the Genoese Frontiers, in order to give all possible Opposition to the Enemy; and it is thought the English Squadron will greatly molest and distress Don Philip's Army in their March by the Rivera. Capt. Ambrose some few Days ago took, sunk or destroyed seven of the Enemy's Vessels laden with Arms, Stores and Provisions near Port Maurice. On the 15th Instant, being Holy Thursday, Marquis d'Ormea was suddenly taken ill at Church, and carried

Home, as was thought, dying; but he is at present considerably better.

Vienna, April 24, N. S. Since the Arrival of General Serbelloni, accompanied by six Postillions, on the 20th Instant, with the News of the Deroute of the French and Palatins at Pfaffenhoven, Colonel Odonnel has brought the following Particularities, viz. That the Loss of the Enemy was much greater than was imagined at first, the killed and wounded exceeding 3000; besides 800 Prisoners, and great Numbers of Deserters; so that it was presumed, M. Segur, who was march'd to Fribourg, would not reach that Place with more than 3000 of his Countrymen: That General Segur was wounded in the Head, but able to keep on Horseback: That the Palatins too were gone off, and, as was supposed, to Heidelbourg or Manheim: That a great Quantity of Bread, just baked, was found at Rain; with a considerable Magazine of all Sorts of Stores: That the Hessians were in the meat while at Fridberg, and the Bavarians under the Cannon of Augsburg.

Vienna, April 24, N. S. After the late Affair at Pfaffenhoven, in which the Enemy were put to Flight, his Excellency Count Bathian ordered General Trips, with the Hussars and Warasdins, to march upon the 16th towards Rain; at the same Time Lieutenant Colonel Prince Lobcowitz was detached towards Aicha with 600 Horse and some few Foot, in order to observe the Motions of the Bavarian Troops, and to harass them in their Retreat towards the Lech. Upon the 17th General Trips obliged the French Garrison at Rain to retire towards the Lech, leaving behind them a considerable Magazine. The Enemy then posted themselves at the Head of the Bridge, endeavouring to maintain themselves there, but General Trips having advanced towards them, and the Warasdins having already begun to pull up the Pallisadoes, they were obliged to abandon it, and to pass the Lech under Favour of their Cannon, which was planted on the other Side that River. Thereupon General Trips took Possession of the Bridge, so that the Enemy had only Time to take up a few Planks on the other Side. They then retired towards
