

the Blessings we enjoy under your Majesty's mild Government, for such Misery, were to a brave people worse than Death.

What then can we think of those Protestants, who joined in this wicked Attempt, when even the Papists must repent the Change of their present too great Indulgence, for a French Government and despotick Tyranny.

What can we think of those, whom neither his late Majesty's Mercy after the late Rebellion, his gentle Reign, and your Majesty's auspicious and happy Government in a Course of a above thirty Years, can reclaim from those absurd and wicked Principles, which have again induced them to disturb the Peace of the happiest and most flourishing Nation of Europe, in the fullest Enjoyment of Civil and Religious Liberties.

What these were endeavouring to destroy, we are determined to defend with our Lives and Fortunes; by supporting, to the utmost of our Power, your Majesty and your Royal Family, under whom alone it is possible for us to enjoy such inestimable Blessings.
