Two Placarts were published last Saturday in the Name of the States of Holland: The first consists of Eleven Articles besides the Preamble, and ordains, that the Laws for the Regulation of the several Trades and Callings exercised in this Province, which were contained in the Ordonances for levying of the Duties that used to be farmed by the Pachters, shall remain in their full Force, and be executed as before the Suppression of the Farms, in order to prevent the Confusion and Disorder which without those Laws would be unavoidable, and occasion the utter Ruin of the Persons who exercise the above-said Trades. The other Placart renews the Orders that have been hitherto observed with Regard to the retailing of divers Commodities; and authorizes the Officers of the Customs, and the Masters and Wardens of the several Trading Companies, to search all Vessels and Carriages which they may suspect with being laden with prohibited Commodities.
