Naples, June 22. The Secretary of State has received Notice, that two of the King's Gallies, cruising off the Presidii, had on the 4th Instant, taken a Tunisine Corsair, with 19 Moors on Board (the rest of its Crew having escaped on Shore) then at Anchor under a small Fort in the Island del Giglio, belonging to Tuscany; and that the Gallies had rescued a Neapolitan Bark, loaden with Wine, that had been taken by the said Corsair. This Event has given great Satisfaction to the Publick, especially as it is confidently reported, that our Court will not harken to any Sollicitations for the Restitution of the said Corsair. A most scandalous Libel is handed about this City against the Neapolitan Nobility of both Sexes, who are greatly offended at it; insomuch, that the King has given his positive Orders to the supreme Judge of the Criminal Court, to use his utmost Endeavours to discover the Author.

Rome, June 26. A few Days ago the Secretary of State received Notice, that the Pope's Gallies, cruising upon the Roman Coast, having on the 4th Instant discovered at Sea, a small Tunisine Corsair, and a large Genoese Filucca, which he had taken, pursued him to a Creek in the Island del Giglio, belonging to Tuscany, where the Crew took Refuge on Shore, and the Gallies carried off the Corsair's Vessel, and its Prize, which they had abandoned.

Florence, July 2. Last Week the Regency sent a Person to the Island del Giglio, to take an exact Account, from the Master of the Tunisine Corsair, of what happened at the small Fort del Campefe, between him and the Neapolitan Gallies.

Warsaw, July 4. According to our last Advices from the Frontiers of Podolia and Volinia, the Heyducks continue to commit great Ravages in those Parts, notwithstanding all the Measures that have been taken to exterminate them. We have received Advice from Radom, a Town in the Palatinate of Sendomir, that a most dreadful Fire lately broke out there, which had consumed the Castle, and about 90 Houses.

Turin, July 7. His Sardinian Majesty sets out for the Baths of Vaudier next Friday, and during his Absence, the Duke of Savoy will receive
