We learn by our last Letters from Corsica, that since the Departure of the French Troops from that Island, the Malecontents have made several Attempts to drive the Genoese from the Posts of Paludella and San Fiorenzo; but as they have always been repulsed with Loss; 'tis imagined they will make no more Attempts on that Side. The same Letters add, that the Malecontents have seized upon one of their Chiefs, whom they accuse of having carried on a secret Correspondence with the Marquess de Grimaldi, the Republick's Commissary General in that Island. They write from Florence, that the Hereditary Prince of Anspach arrived there on Monday last from Rome; and that his Highness was to continue his Journey in a Day or two for Germany.
