

General Wedel found Means to prevent that Junction by marching to Plauen, opposite Croffen. The King, informed of this March, had in the mean Time ordered a Part of the Troops, which were under the Command of Prince Henry, to advance; and having appointed his Royal Highness to the Command of the Army opposed to Marshal Daun, his Majesty had put himself at the Head of the above-mentioned Reinforcement, and marched, on the 1st Instant, from Christianstadt to Sommerfeldt, from whence the Corps under General Haddick had retired at his Majesty's approach, with great Precipitation. Our Troops, however, came up that Day with the Rear Guard of the Austrians, which was attacked by our Hussars, who got from them a considerable Booty. The next Day, our Cavalry was again engaged with that Rear Guard, and made 1200 Prisoners, (amongst whom there were 36 Officers;) and likewise took all the Ovens of the Enemy, and 300 Waggons loaded with Flour, together with 50 more of Powder, which was immediately destroyed by setting Fire to it. On the 3d, General Wedel's Army was at Crossen; and the King arrived, the same Day, at Bessow. Several other Skirmishes happened that Day; at which Time the Number of Prisoners, made upon General Haddick's Corps, amounted to Sixteen Hundred.

We have likewise just now received Advice from Landshut, That General Fouquet had repulsed General de Ville, who attempted a fresh Irruption into Silesia on that Side; upon which Occasion the latter had lost 700 Men killed or taken.

The Troops of the Circles having made several Inroads into the Provinces of Magdebourg and Halberstadt, the King has detached General Finck, with a Body of 9000 Men, to dislodge them from thence.
